Japanese Reject Proposal by U. S. For Naval Slash

Object to Davis Plan Despite Approval of Other Powers.

Nipponese Insist They Want Parity

London Parley Opened in an Atmosphere of Pessimism.

Text of Davis' Address, Page 6.

London, Dec. 9.—A quick Japanese "no" stood out in sharp relief tonight against a background of surprisingly favorable naval conference reaction from other quarters to America's proposal that the world's sea powers cut their navies by 20 per cent.

But the favorable response from elsewhere raised little hope for the success of the five-power conference, which began its deliberations in the historic Locarno room of the British foreign office this morning—and in a setting dark for disarmament.

The Japanese, through Admiral Osami Nagano, their principal delegate, flatly rejected the American porposal advanced by Norman H. Davis. They turned it down as a mere perpetuation of the existing ratio system.

That system they are determined to destroy, because it limits Japan to three-fifths of the naval power maintained by either the United States or Great Britain. They countered with the parity demand, which is the real crux of the conference.

U. S., Britain Lined Up.

Developments at the end of the first day of speech-making and maneuvering showed the Americans and British on one hand and the Japanese on the other hand adamant in their divergent positions on the 5-5-3 naval ratio.

The British agreed in principle to the American plan. The Italians said they would give it serious consideration. The French declared, "We already have advocated a much greater reduction at Geneva."

Yet the American scheme which experts calculated would save the taxpayers of the world upwards of a billion dollars in naval construction costs alone appeared backed by little real optimism even by the Americans themselves.

The Japanese made it clear they favor reduction, but that it must not be tied to the ratio system.

A Japanese statement said:

"We seek to establish immutably the principle of non-menace and non-aggression among the great naval powers, reducing as much as possible the burden inherent in armament competition.

Demand Submarines.

"As a prerequisite, however, we propose to set up a common upper limit of naval armament among the world's leading sea powers, because it is the settled conviction of our government that only by discarding the old ratioing system of limitation and by recognizing the equality of national defense for each country may we hope to achieve an agreement at once just and fair."

The Japanese, who took a stronger position at the press meeting where their rejection was announced than at the opening session of the conference, suggested abolition or drastic reduction of capital ships, aircraft carriers and large cruisers.

But they demanded freedom in the making of submarines, destroyers and small cruisers.

Presenting President Roosevelt's proposal for progressive naval armament reduction, Davis pledged the United States to refrain from taking the lead in any naval race.

"We want limitation and reductions," he told the delegates of nations possessing 1,500 warships. "We want limitation and reduction. We have no wish to exceed treaty limits."

The American "ambassador at large" quoted a letter representing

Rioters Spread Through Cairo; Army on Guard

Boy Dying, Girl Wounded in Clashes; Police Told to Fire Into Mobs.

Copyright, 1935, by the United Press.

Cairo, Egypt, Dec. 9.—Egyptian troops were ordered into Cairo today as anti-British rioting turned the capital into a miniature battle ground.

One hundred soldiers "dug in" around Kasir El Ainy Hospital, where the government feared violent rioting if one of its inmates, Machmud Abdel Hakim, a student, dies.

Machmud was the first victim of yesterday's cabinet decree empowering police to shoot directly at rioters instead of over their heads. The youth was shot in the chest by a British constable this morning when 200 students attempted to hold a meeting to continue their campaign against British dominance of Egypt.

Doctors held little hope for Machmud's recovery. In addition to the soldiers, scores of steel-helmeted policemen were stationed around the hospital.

Meanwhile, 1,000 angry, sullen students assembled at nearby Rhoda Hospital, still under construction, where they gathered stones and missiles.

Commandeered Train.

"The time for talking is past," leaders asserted. "Only action now suffices. On with the revolution."

In another part of the riot-weary city, a 15-year-old girl, Negia Hassan, a student of the Princess Fauzea secondary school, was shot in the head, and another girl was beaten on the head when police dispersed a mixed crowd of 300 secondary students attempting to reach Kasir El Ainy Hospital.

The rioters, mostly girls, commandeered a train of six tram cars.

Police rushed the tram cars and drove the screaming, wailing girls into the street.

The wounded girls were carried to a nearby pharmacy by male classmates. The pharmacy was surrounded immediately by a crowd in a threatening, ugly mood.

One student shouted:

"Now they've started shooting our girls. We won't stand for that!"

Police cleared the pharmacy a short while later and the girls were removed to a hospital.

The city seethed with unrest. Every few blocks groups were being dispersed. The streets were strewn with broken glass, bricks

Il Duce Warm To Peace Bid, Rome Admits

Franco-British Proposal Expected to Form Parley Basis.

Italians Joyous Despite 'Reservations' Hint of Diplomats.

By the United Press.

Rome, Dec. 9.—Premier Benito Mussolini will accept the Franco-British proposals with reservations as basis for discussion of peace with Ethiopia, diplomats believed tonight.

In return, the extension of sanctions to Italy's vital military needs is expected to be postponed by the League of Nations. The Geneva "sanctions general staff" of 18 is to meet Thursday to take up the proposed oil embargo.

Il Duce's favorable intention could not be confirmed at the foreign office, where the spokesman said Italy was maintaining the strictest reserve until the proposals are offered officially.

If the draft arrives tonight or tomorrow morning, Mussolini will have an opportunity to announce his decision dramatically to the Fascist Chamber of Deputies, which he is scheduled to address tomorrow.

Radio Hints Acceptance.

The government's 2 p. m. news broadcast contained an item regarded as highly significant of Italy's warmth toward the Paris plan. It said: "Official quarters in Paris express belief that the proposals at this time would be satisfactory for Italian acceptance. It is believed Premier Mussolini soon will instruct Baron Oloisi (Italian League delegate) to proceed immediately to Geneva."

As a result of the indications that Mussolini would accept, a wave of optimism swept Rome. For the first time since League sanctions laid their grim hold on Italian life, the atmosphere was lighthearted.

Reason for the improved spirit appeared to be two-fold. The Italians welcome peace and they believe—on the basis of unofficial reports—that they are getting a good offer.

Reservations "Important."

There is no indication regarding the nature of Mussolini's reservations but they were described by one source as "important."

Il Duce made a brief appearance before the Senate today. The fact that he wore formal morning dress rather than his usual Fascist uniform seemed in keeping with the new spirit of conciliation.

"I can assure the Senate that Italian interests in Africa and Europe will be defended strenuously," Mussolini said.

Selassie May Balk.

Addis Ababa, Dec. 9 (U.P.).—The "forgotten man" of the Franco-British peace proposals—Emperor Haile Selassie of Ethiopia—may refuse to demobilize his armies unless the plan looks better than first reports, it was indicated tonight.

Officials greeted first versions with coldness mixed with ridicule. "The gentlemen at Paris have been too interested in pacifying Il Duce to observe justice to Ethiopia," one authority commented.

"If the formal draft bears out reports that Ethiopia would surrender most of Tigre in the north and a zone in the south bounded by the eighth parallel and the thirty-sixth meridian, then the plan is completely unacceptable," a government spokesman said.

The reported proposal that Italy retire from Aksum, Ethiopia's ancient Holy City, was regarded favorably. There is "just a bare chance," the spokesman said, that Selassie might be willing to exchange part of Tigre, excepting Aksum, for a corridor to the Red Sea and a seaport, both of which must be under Ethiopian sovereignty.

"The Negus never will cede an inch of north territory under the present state of affairs," the official said, apparently meaning that Ethiopia never would accept a peace based on Italy's present occupation, which extends from the Setit River on the Sudan border westward to the northern Danakil and projects to Makale and the lower Takazze.

Hauptmann Stoical in His Cell As Supreme Court Denies Plea

Doomed Man Shrugs, Smiles When Decision Reaches Trenton.

By the United Press.

Trenton, N. J., Dec. 9.—Bruno Richard Hauptmann leaned against the bars of his cell in the death house of State Prison tonight and shrugged his shoulders when he was told that the United States Supreme Court had blocked another avenue of hope against him.

A smile flickered at the corners of the mouth of this man who is closer to the electric chair than he has been at any time since he was convicted in Flemington last winter of murdering Charles A. Lindbergh, jr.

Hauptmann peered through the bars into the face of another tall, lean-jawed man—Egbert Rosecrans, the young attorney who filed Hauptman's plea with the Supreme Court and who hurried down the prison corridor today to tell him that another hope was blasted.

It was a strange conversation that took place—friendly, but unemotional—like two men discussing the sale of an automobile. The only optimistic thing Rosecrans was able to tell Hauptmann was that he might seek a new trial on the basis of fresh evidence, and that the New Jersey Court of Pardons might be prevailed upon, in the last resort, to commute the death sentence to imprisonment.

"I walked up to the cell and told

New Evidence, Petition for Pardon Are Only Hopes Remaining.

The United States Supreme Court yesterday declined to interfere with the sentence of death passed upon Bruno Richard Hauptmann for the murder of baby Charles A. Lindbergh.

A petition for review of the Flemington (N. J.) trial of the former German machine-gunner was denied by the Nation's highest tribunal, after a thorough cloistered reading of the record in the case.

The high court finding means death in the electric chair for Hauptmann, unless the condemned man's counsel can obtain another trial on the basis of new evidence, or unless the New Jersey Board of Pardons modifies the present sentence.

A mysterious quest for new evidence, that has attracted the interest of the Governor of the State, led to belief that the former course will be followed. Attorneys for the former Bronx carpenter yesterday again hinted at new evidence and said a petition for a new trial is being considered.

Throngs of curious spectators who packed the Supreme Court's courtroom to hear opening arguments in the first court test of AAA validity received no oral word from the justices of their Hauptmann case ruling.

Chief Justice Charles E. Hughes read only a few of the court's

Publisher Slain From Ambush In Minneapolis

Walter Liggett, Storm Center of Politics, Shot Down Before Wife, Child.

By the Associated Press.

Minneapolis, Dec. 9.—Two gunmen tonight assassinated Walter Liggett, publisher of the Midwest American and storm center of numerous political and other controversies here for several years.

While his wife and young daughter looked on, Liggett was killed as he stepped from his automobile in the rear of his apartment.

Three pistol shots ended his variegated career.

Mrs. Liggett told detectives she thought she recognized the assailants and furnished officers with names of the suspects.

Isadore (Kid Cann) Blumenfeld, Minneapolis liquor runner, who served a term in the workhouse following a liquor conviction, was taken into custody for questioning shortly after.

Ambush Well Planned.

The ambusade was carefully timed to intercept the publisher as he returned from a grocery shopping tour. As Liggett stepped from the machine in which his wife, Edith, and 10-year-old daughter, Marda, were seated, three shots blazed in rapid succession from another car across the alley.

Liggett, a load of packages in his arms, stumbled and the groceries scattered over the pavement.

As the daughter screamed, "Don't, Daddy! Don't!" the other machine raced down the alley.

Although a crowd from the neighboring apartments quickly collected, no one who saw the other machine drive off could be found, other than Mrs. Liggett.

She informed police she got only a glimpse of the assassins, but that she believed there were only two men in the death car.

Liggett entered the publishing

Cadetship Sale Offer Is Pinned To C. A. Hoeppel

Ives Identifies Congressman's Son as Solicitor of Appointment Bribe.

Positive identification of Charles A. Hoeppel as the man who offered to provide him with an appointment to West Point in return for $1,000 was made in the District Supreme Court yesterday by James W. Ives, erstwhile Olympic athlete.

Stepping down from the witness stand, Ives, a stalwart, ruddy-faced young man of 23, went to where young Hoeppel was sitting and placed his hand on his shoulder. He identified him as Charles Alexander, a name under which Hoeppel is under indictment. His father, Representative John H. Hoeppel (Democrat), California, a co-defendant, sat by his son's side while Ives placed his hands on Charles' shoulder to make certain of his identification.

Placed Under Subpena.

Both father and son are under indictment on charges of conspiracy to solicit a bribe in connection with an appointment Ives was seeking to the West Point Military Academy.

Shortly after Ives had picked out young Hoeppel as "Alexander" he was asked to step down from the stand and pick out a person who had allegedly approached him shortly before Thanksgiving and had asked him to drop the case, Assistant United States Attorney David A. Pine said.

The man, identified as George Trinastich, of the 1600 block of K street northwest, was immediately placed under a subpena calling for him to appear in court today to be questioned.

The Hoeppels were charged with offering to Ives an appointment to West Point in return for $1,000. The latter is said to have demurred at the cost, but was unable to get it lowered. Later on, the Govern-

Freedom Is Called Vindication Of Filipinos' Ability, U.S. Faith

The following article, the first of a series of five on the new Philippine Commonwealth, was mailed from Manila on December 2, by Vicente Albano Pacis, resident correspondent of The Post in that city. Traveling by the China Clipper and transcontinental air mail the articles were delivered in Washington, having traversed half the globe, exactly a week after leaving the hands of Mr. Pacis.

In these articles, which will be run consecutively in The Post, Mr. Pacis examines the background of the Philippine independence.

By Vicente Albano Pacis.

The Philippine Commonwealth, which came into existence on November 15, is essentially a symbol of historical vindication for both the United States and the Philippines.

America has had to vindicate itself. When President McKinley took the Philippines without the Filipinos' consent, he violated a cardinal principle of American political philosophy. Furthermore, the Filipinos, after having been made to understand that America's only purpose in the islands was to help in their liberation, were ruthlessly and forcibly subjugated. Their original faith in America was replaced by dark doubts and misgivings. America has had to vindicate itself for its own satisfaction, for that of the world, and for that of the Filipinos.

The Filipinos, on the other hand, have had to justify their claim, which they have maintained through peace and war, that they are capable of self-government. They fought the Spaniards on the basis of this claim. They went to war against American forces for three years nerved by this belief. And though later they submitted to American rule and co-operation in the carrying out of the American program, they continuously asserted that they were all the time ready for independence. The Filipinos have had to win recognition of their political merits.

Thus the setting up of the commonwealth which, according to the Congressional act of independence, will automatically give way to complete independence at the end of the tenth year, proves American good faith on the one hand and Filipino capacity on the other hand.

It has been officially asserted that America came upon the Philippines by the accident of war. And except for the fact that Admiral Dewey, by order of Theodore Roosevelt, arrived somewhat too soon in Manila Bay to sink the Spanish Armada, the assertion appears correct. No predetermined intention to take over the Philippines, then a spot in the

Near Rioting Upsets Parley On Recovery

Session Breaks Up With Industrialists Striving Vainly for Floor.

2,000 Present, but Majority Refuse Cooperation on U. S. Plan.

By Felix Bruner.

Differences between industry and the New Deal flared into almost literal combat yesterday at the business conference called by Maj. George L. Berry, co-ordinator for industrial co-operation. The meeting was called for the purpose of determining what, if anything, industry and labor wished to do in co-operation with the Government for promotion of recovery.

Attended by more than 2,000 persons, the first session broke up in a demonstration closely resembling a riot.

Out of a day of confusion there emerged last night the fact that a majority of the business groups attending the sessions had declined to co-operate in the formation of an industrial council to outline future policies.

Small Groups Still in Line.

Although Berry headquarters made public the names of about 25 individuals who had been named to represent business on the proposed council, nearly all of those named represented small subdivisions of the 44 general groups into which the conference was divided. On the other hand, representatives of the most important industrial groups issued a barrage of statements giving their reasons for declining to co-operate.

Labor, however, is expected to support the movement. Most of the labor meetings, 13 in all, were postponed until today. Each of these meetings is expected to elect a council member.

In spite of obstacles, Berry indicated in a radio speech last night that he intends to go ahead with the industrial council idea and said that its number doubtless would be augmented by representatives of other industries as its purposes and intentions are clearly understood.

Lashes Fight Sponsors.

In a separate statement, he lashed out at the group which precipitated the demonstration in the meeting this morning by attempting to gain the floor in spite of a previous announcement that Berry would be the only speaker.

He said that the demonstration was started by minority interests "representing approximately 50 human beings, as against the millions represented by industry and labor in the whole group which gathered for the opening of the conference."

"The tactics pursued," he said, "were those normally taken by obstructionists to progress whom some people commonly characterize as Communists. The difference was that Communists usually have a program. These interests are without one and their effort was pathetic."

Delegate Demands Floor.

The riotous demonstration came as Berry attempted to adjourn the opening session. It had been announced that the meeting would be only for the purpose of outlining the program of the conference. Berry was the only speaker. As he concluded his remarks he announced the meeting was adjourned.

John W. O'Leary, head of the Machinery and Allied Products Institute and a former president of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, jumped to his feet, well back in the hall, and demanded recognition.

"The meeting is adjourned," Berry replied.

A half dozen persons were on their feet demanding recognition. The crowd broke into cheers, hisses and boos. Nearly everybody was standing. Four or five men were standing on their seats shouting to be heard. The crowd began milling about and gathering around the would-be speakers. Above the noise were the shouts of Berry announcing the meeting was adjourned.

President Gives Talks in Midwest; Returns to Capital Today.

Text of Farm Address, Page 10.

The President's Day.

President Roosevelt, speaking before the convention of the American Farm Bureau Federation at Chicago yesterday, struck at critics of his farm program as "political advantage seekers and profiteers."

At a luncheon given by Mayor Edward J. Kelly, of Chicago, he insisted "we have no intention of getting mixed up in the wars of the world."

Receiving a degree at Notre Dame University, he held up the torch of religious liberty "for the guidance of other nations if they will accept it."

The President will return to the Capital early today.

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.,
A Staff Correspondent.

En Route with President Roosevent from Chicago to Washington, Dec. 9.—Glowing with pleasure as there rang in his ears an enthusiastic indorsement of him from a prelate of the Catholic Church and a great farmers' organization, President Roosevelt tonight was speeding back to Washington to prepare for the next session of Congress.

It was one of the busiest days Mr. Roosevelt has spent since he entered the White House, and it resembled a day of active political campaigning. He made two prepared addresses and two extemporaneous speeches, one of some length. They ranged from a defense of his farm program to a plea for religious toleration and a summons to the nations of the world to stop their local and international quarrels and squabbles and emulate the United States.

The President started back to the Capital with two major honors conferred on him. The American Farm Bureau Federation awarded him its 1935 gold medal for distinguished service to agriculture, and Notre Dame University conferred on him an honorary degree of doctor of laws.

Hits Farm Critics.

Mr. Roosevelt's day started in the International Amphitheater at the Chicago Stockyards with a defense of his farm program and a sharp castigation of its critics as "political advantage seekers and profiteers" before the farm federation in annual convention. After loudly cheering him, the farmers presented him with their most coveted honor.

A few hundred feet away from the amphitheater, the President and his party entered the famed Saddle and Sirloin Club and there, as the guest of Mayor Edward J. Kelly, of Chicago, ate juicy sirloin steaks.

The President was so delighted with his luncheon that he unexpectedly addressed the several hundred Illinois Democrats present at length, explaining to them his plans to bring about an integration of American agriculture and industry and to aid "under-privileged" citizens.

To Keep Out of War.

Expressing pride in the American people, the President reiterated his assurance that this country would stay out of foreign wars and in effect called on the nations of the world to "stop their local and international quarrels and squabbles and take a leaf out of the notebook of the United States."

Hurriedly leaving the luncheon club, the President climbed aboard his train for the brief trip to South Bend, Ind., and Notre Dame University. Thousands of Indianans lined South Bend's streets cheering the slowly moving Presidential motorcade. At the University the President was warmly received by George Cardinal Mundelein, of Chicago, seven Catholic bishops and other dignitaries of the church.

In an impressive ceremony, Notre Dame conferred an honorary degree on the President, lauding his courage in grappling with the depres-

Supreme Court Battle Begins On AAA Taxes

HOLC Is Denied Right to Federalize State Loan, Building Agencies.

By Robert C. Albright.

Processing taxes—keystone of the Administration's farm adjustment program—passed under scrutiny of the United States Supreme Court yesterday, challenged by miller opposition as "wholly regulatory, and part of a national scheme to invade States' rights in violation of the Constitution."

Nine robed justices, who must ultimately decide whether AAA and its taxes are valid, listened while Solicitor General Stanley Reed denied the right of the millers to question the uses of processing revenues. Next they heard former Senator George Wharton Pepper, speaking for Hoosac Mills, insist validation of the AAA would transform Congress into "a national parliament, with no restraint as respects control over industry and agriculture, except self restraint."

Aside from the close questioning of Reed, which started speculation on a possible split in the court's final AAA ruling, the justices gave no clear intimation of what their own combined judgment may be. It will continue to hear arguments today.

Backs States' Rights.

Earlier yesterday, however, the court handed down decisions in three cases involving the sphere of Federal powers, in two of which it held out for the rights of the States against Federal encroachment.

Backed by a unanimous court vote, Justice Cardoza said that the home owners' loan act, "to the extent that it permits the conversion of State associations into Federal ones in contravention of the laws of the place of their creation, is an unconstitutional encroachment upon the reserved powers of the States."

Upholding a ruling by the Wisconsin Supreme Court, the justices decided that a section of the home owners loan act of 1933 cannot be construed as authorizing State building and loan associations to acquire Federal charters over the opposition of the State.

Three Wisconsin building and loan associations seeking Federal charters had appealed to the Supreme Court. In a statement last night the Federal Home Loan Bank board said the decision affects only the three Wisconsin associations converted into Federally chartered

Boy, Hit on Santa Trip, Dying; Motorist Killed; Toll Now 112

A man was dead and a 5-year-old boy dying last night from traffic accidents.

Frank Yanda, 50, of Tuxedo, Md., was killed.

William Cain, 5, of 911 I street southeast, lay dying at Providence Hospital.

Yanda, whose death brought the year's fatality list to 112, was the operator of a car which struck a street car at Kenilworth avenue and Douglas street northeast. He died of a broken neck a few minutes after he was admitted to Casualty Hospital. The trolley motorman was Ray Wells, 26, of 1914 Bennett place northeast.

In his childish eagerness to see Santa Claus, little William Cain tugged from his father's arm yesterday into the path of a street car at Sixth street and Pennsylvania avenue southeast.

Stepping into the path of one of the new type cars, operated by Howson McLearen, 60, of Clarendon, Va., the child was struck before his father, John C. Cain, an employe of the Navy Yard, could pull him back.

At Providence Hospital, William was found to be suffering a fractured skull and severe head cuts. The boy's father said he had taken today off from work so his son could see Santa Claus. As they were crossing the car tracks, Mr.

Toy Fund Opens Way to Send Santa to Children in Hospitals

A chance to share Christmas happiness with sick children in the city's hospitals is offered through The Washington Post Toy and Doll Fund.

Last year The Post Toy Fund brought presents to children in several hospitals, especially Children's Hospital.

The gifts of toys, made possible by those who supported the fund, brought smiles to wan faces and illness was forgotten.

Again this year many of the toys received or purchased from cash contributions to the fund will bring Santa Claus to hospital wards.

The Post Toy Fund, which has headquarters in The Washington Post Building, also heeds appeals from patriotic societies and other groups for the children within the reach of their ministrations.

Individual appeals from mothers and other guardians are also answered after checking to avoid duplication with central files of the Council of Social Agencies.

No mother or father who reads of The Post Toy Fund, and cannot provide for his or her children, need hesitate to ask for a share of the toys raised through this fund. The only conditions are that they have no other way of obtaining toys and have not appealed to other groups.

WPA Plans Use Of $12,000,000 On Jobs Survey

24,000 to be Employed in Tracing Machines' Part in Unemployment.

The WPA set aside $12,000,000 yesterday for a survey that will seek to determine, among other things, how much of the relief problem has been due to replacing of workers by machines.

The survey itself is expected to give work to 24,000 white-collar unemployed.

Corrington Gill, assistant WPA administrator, is in charge of the undertaking. The first project will be directed by David Weintraub, with headquarters in Philadelphia.

The nature of the latter's program is forecast by a recent report made to WPA by him on "Re-employment Opportunities and Recent Changes in Industrial Techniques." In the report he pointed out that from 1920 to 1928 manufacturing industries increased their volume by 37 per cent, while employment dropped 2 per cent; freight carloadings increased 6 per cent, as railway employes declined 10 per cent in number; coal production—from 1919 to 1927—increased 10 per cent, as the number of miners dwindled by 24 per cent; between 1919 and 1927 agriculture was increasing its production, while 800,000 agricultural workers were being displaced.

Questions Raised.

Weintraub estimates that at the depression's peak approximately one-third of the total number of gainful workers were unemployed, although the decline in production of goods was said to be far less than this. Some of the questions which that part of national research program under his direction hopes to answer are: How many of the present unemployed can hope to get jobs again? How many would get jobs if production returned to its 1929 level? To what extent is our present unemployment due to labor-saving devices? Has employment in the machinery industries offset declines in other industries due to the introduction of machines? To what extent are "displaced workers" forced to take employment at less skilled trades and lower wages?

The Weintraub project expects to make a report on data gathered within 12 months. Other projects will be announced soon by Gill.

Meanwhile, because PWA is on the surface a more costly way of giving work to men on relief than through works relief projects, Secretary Ickes, PWA administrator, recently appealed to the Bureau of Labor Statistics to estimate the amount of work indirectly provided. Yesterday he obtained a part answer: The bureau estimated that since its inception in 1933 PWA has provided 70,000,000 man-hours of work in the cement industry alone, in producing and transporting this one commodity for PWA's needs.

More than $130,000,000 was paid out in wages to cement workers and handlers as a direct result of past PWA contracts for 62,000,000 barrels of cement, it was said.

Job Figures Given.

Last spring the Bureau of Labor Statistics, studying the effects of PWA on steel and iron production, exclusive of machinery, estimated that for every man from the relief rolls who received a PWA job placing these materials in position on the construction site, between three and four other men were employed by private industries in producing the iron and steel and transporting it to the job. These steel products, at a cost of $257,000,000 by October 15, had distributed 383,000,000 man-hours of labor among workers in the mining, fabricating and transportation industries, all of this in addition to the work PWA furnished for men selected from relief rolls who finally put the steel in place.

Largely as a result of the past PWA program, employment in the cement industry is now 60 per cent higher than in March, 1933, the report said.

Cuban Candidates Abandon Election

By the Associated Press.

Havana, Dec. 9.—Former President Mario G. Menocal and hundreds of candidates of the Menocalista Party tonight had placed their resignations as candidates in the hands of the national executive committee of the party.

This action constituted not only a withdrawal from participation in the elections President Carlos Mendieta today insisted would be held January 10, but, if other parties carry out the plans leaders have announced, would leave the Mariánista-Nationalist coalition without opposition in the elections.

Menocalistas apparently were convinced that no election could be successful without at least two important parties participating.

President Mendieta today agreed to explain the Cuban situation to the people of the United States in a special broadcast tomorrow night.

Postoffice Bans Sweepstakes Mail

By the United Press.

The Postoffice Department issued fraud orders last night against 242 sweepstakes operators, 201 of them in Canada, and ordered they be denied the use of United States mails.

The order will prevent the sending of sweepstakes tickets or literature pertaining to sweepstakes by mail into this country by the concerns named, Postoffice officials said.

The order included the largest number of sweepstakes operators ever named at one time by this Government, officials said.

Of the 201 in Canada, 156 are in Montreal, 21 in Ottawa, 14 in Sherbrooke, 3 in Coaticook, 2 in Westmound and 5 in Verdun. Twenty were in Havana, 8 in Dublin, 8 in Manila and 5 in Luxembourg.

Critics Boost Landon's Stock; The Standard Oil Myth; Kansan a Friend of Farmers.

By Raymond Clapper

DURING the present dull stretch, Gov. Landon's campaign for the Republican Presidential nomination is receiving some much valued help from his belittlers. It is another instance of Landon luck.

While other aspirants for the nomination must chase about the country, warning of the calamities just around the corner, Landon sits quietly in his office and lets his critics keep his campaign alive.

His latest windfall was the Standard Oil story, broadcast by former Senator Smith Wildman Brookhart of Iowa, who said Landon was the Standard Oil candidate.

Actually this gave Landon's friends the opening they had been waiting for, the pretext for retelling of the fight between Landon and Standard Oil in Kansas politics.

In 1930, when Landon was State chairman and political manager for Gov. Clyde Reed, they were bitterly fought by the Standard Oil forces. A Wichita dispatch in the Kansas City Star of August 3, 1930, gives the picture. This dispatch, by a Star staff writer, read, in part:

"The Standard Oil Co. is reaching out to gain control of the Republican State committee in Kansas. It is the first time in many years that the Standard has attempted an open move to control the party organization.

"At Independence today, Sam Fitzpatrick, head of the Prairie Pipe Line Co., a subsidiary of Standard, who has looked after Standard Oil politics in the State for years, called the employes of the Prairie Company together and made a speech about the company's interest in politics. Fitzpatrick assured them the company did not 'seek to control' their votes, but, he pointed out, first, that Gov. Clyde M. Reed was a menace to the Standard's interests in Kansas. He urged them to vote for Frank (Chief) Haucke for Governor and to defeat Reed.

"Fitzpatrick did not stop there. He urged the employes to vote for precinct committeemen favored by the Standard Oil Co. A few weeks ago the Standard put a complete list of precinct candidates in the field for the primary. Every man nominated for precinct committeeman is a public utility agent or lawyer. One man is the Santa Fe agent at Independence. The purpose of the fight made by the big oil company to grab the Republican county organization is to accomplish the defeat of Alfred M. Landon, now State chairman. The Standard's political leaders named a precinct candidate against Landon. The reason assigned for taking such a radical step was that if Landon were continued as State chairman he 'would be a candidate against Dave Mulvane (for national committeeman) in 1932.'"

They defeated Landon. He was living in Independence, headquarters of the Prairie Company, many of whose officials and department heads voted in his precinct. Landon knew them all and played bridge with many of them but they voted against him.

Landon is an oil producer, an independent. His interests were with hundreds of other independents who sold their oil to the big refining companies. Their interests were frequently in conflict, as are those between wheat raisers and the millers who buy their grain.

Later in 1930 Landon, as chairman of the steering committee of Kansas oil producers, led the fight to prevent the big pipe lines from discontinuing to take oil from the weaker stripper wells, which would have meant ruin to hundreds of independent producers and loss of royalties and lease rights to thousands of farmers owning oil-bearing land.

As an oil producer Landon has many friends and associates in the oil business who think enough of him to want to contribute to his campaign fund if and when he needs their help. That fact was all that was needed to start the Standard oil myth. Of course, Landon has friends in other lines of business from heavy machinery to fountain pens and many of them also will want to contribute. But they will scarcely be mentioned because they are not, like oil, highly volatile in politics. Oil is the demagogue's dynamite and has to be handled with care.

Disorder Ends Session Called For Recovery

ing on a seat, persisted in his demand that O'Leary be heard.

"Get yourself a hall. You are out of order!" Berry shouted.

"We are American citizens and anything is in order," Haake replied. "You presented one point of view. We want to present the other."

"You were sent here to dynamite this meeting," Berry yelled above the noise of the shouting applause and booing. 'You are doing a very nice job, but you don't quite get away with it."

"That is an unqualified lie," Haake retorted.

Berry stepped to the edge of the stage.

"I'll take you on for that," he shouted. "You'll eat it, eat it, eat it!"

The shouting and milling about continued, but some of the delegates were leaving the hall and the noise finally subsided.

Later O'Leary made public the speech he had intended to make.

"Let Industry Alone."

"We are of the opinion that this proposed undertaking is being initiated without adequate consideration as to its merits, and without any consideration of its timing," he said.

"The one thing American business needs above all else is to be let alone to recover by its own natural processes the vigor and vitality of which it has been deprived by the artificial interferences of the recent past."

As each of the groups met they were presented a list of proposals that had been made, but there was no suggestion that they be followed. They included amendment of the Federal Trade Commission act to give it power over wages and hours, shorter week and licensing of industry; modification of anti-trust laws, various employment measures and a suggestion that the whole question of taxation be examined.

In a general meeting of labor during the afternoon, William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, called attention to the Mahoney bill, introduced in the last session of Congress, to license interstate industry. It was expected this and a program for a shorter work week would be the basis of labor's requests.

Green said the latest estimate of the A. F. of L. indicated there were 11,647,000 unemployed, compared with 15,740,000 in March, 1933.

Confusion Prevails.

Because some delegates were appointed to represent subdivisions of groups, while groups as a whole failed to name members of the proposed conference, announcements were extremely confusing. For instance, the Berry headquarters announced appointment of a member representing the chemical group, while the group itself announced it had named no one. The same was true of the construction group, of the food manufacturing group, and of several others. Differences in classifying groups led to part of the difficulty.

Business groups themselves announced that the following industries had failed or declined to name council members: Fisheries, food producing and distributing, alcohol, paper, nonferrous products, iron and steel, machinery, transportation equipment, general manufactured products, general job shops, construction, minerals, nonmetallic products, forest products, public service, general service, rubber chemicals, wood products, distributing, drugs, basic materials.

Business groups which Berry said had named council members are: Wholesale and retail tobacco, rivers and harbors improvement, wholesale and retail food distributors, fabricated leather products, general manufactured products, hardware, electrical supplies and machines, retail drug, wholesale distributing, food manufacturers, construction, paper, merchandise warehousing, cotton warehousing, air transport, paper converters, motor vehicle distributing, apparel.

Some of the groups failed to hold meetings, others merely declined to be represented and others adopted resolutions condemning the conference plan.

Board Assails Liberty League On Guffey Act

Commission Says Perhaps 'Monopoly' Is Group's Idea of Liberty.

By the Associated Press.

The Bituminous Coal Commission blasted back at the American Liberty League lawyers committee last night with a suggestion that "perhaps the league's version of liberty is monopoly."

The committee volunteered an opinion on Sunday that the Guffey coal control act was unconstitutional. The commission was set up to administer the act, intended to stabilize the soft coal industry.

"On its face, it appears that the Liberty League is taking liberties with all that it claims to hold so sacred," C. F. Hosford, jr., chairman of the commission, said in a statement.

"Why is it not content to have the courts decide the right of the Federal Government to stabilize an industry that has a record for starvation wages, cut-throat competition and wasteful practices which, if unrestrained, will eventually result in a monopoly of a major natural resource?

"Perhaps the league's version of liberty is monopoly."

Meantime, Postoffice lawyers ruled that certain limits placed on coal sales by the Guffey act do not apply to Government purchases.

A provision in the Guffey act that "until prices shall have been established pursuant to this act, no contract for the sale of coal shall be made providing for delivery for a period longer than 30 days from the date of contract" prompted an interpretation by Solicitor Karl A. Crowley.

The commission said the lawyers' opinion would be "totally disregarded" and would have "no effect" on the commission's functions.

Aviation Chamber Elects L. W. Rogers

Succeeds Morgan as Head of Trade Agency.

The election of Leighton W. Rogers as president of the Aeronautical Chamber of Commerce was announced yesterday by the organization's board of governors.

Rogers, who has been serving as executive vice president for 2½ years, succeeds Thomas A. Morgan, of New York, as head of the aviation industry's trade organization.

Morgan, chairman of the board of the Curtiss-Wright Corporation, resigned for business reasons. He has been head of the chamber for three years.

In announcing Rogers' election, the Aeronautical Chamber's board of governors stated that it had "accepted a resolution of the air transport operators agreeing to withdraw from the chamber.

The chamber thus becomes a service organization for the manufacturing industry. The change was made in order to conform to the spirit of the recent air-mail legislation which discourages any affiliation between manufacturing and operating aviation organizations."

U. S. Ready to Sue Greyhound Lines

Will Ask Court to Enforce Labor Board Ruling

By the Associated Press.

The Labor Relations Board yesterday said it would ask the Circuit Court of Appeals within a few days to enforce the board's decision that the Pennsylvania Greyhound Lines, Inc., had violated the Wagner act.

This was the board's reply to a statement by counsel for the bus line, a Pennsylvania Railroad interest, that "fortunately, orders of the Labor Board have no force until passed upon by a court of competent jurisdiction."

Board members said the petition for enforcement of its orders for the company to stop alleged interference with its employes' union activity would be filed in the Third Circuit Court of Appeals at Philadelphia, possibly today.

During a hearing of the Greyhound case, the company challenged the Wagner act's constitutionality.

When the United States Supreme Court yesterday refused to review the trial of Richard Hauptmann, doomed for the murder of the Lindbergh baby, his fate automatically was placed in the hands of the New Jersey Board of Pardons. Left to right, top: Chancellor Luther A. Campbell, Gov. Hoffman, Judges Joseph A. Dear and Walter L. Hetfield. Bottom: Judges Harold B. Wells, William D. Wolfskeil, George Van Buskirk and John J. Rafferty, of the Court of Error and Appeals.

him that the Supreme Court had denied his review," Rosecrans said. "He shrugged his shoulders and smiled a bit."

There was no awkward pause then, no groping for words. Instead, these two men went into this conversation:

"I'm sorry I couldn't bring you any better news," Rosecrans said.

"I know you did everything you possibly could with what you had to work on," Hauptmann replied. "I want to thank you."

"Richard, how do you really feel about it now?"

"Well, in a way, I am glad the legal part of it is over."

"Has No Fear."

There in the uncertain light, he scribbled on the envelope this statement as Hauptmann dictated it:

"Of course, I am disappointed, because if I had a new trial it would bring out the new evidence, but I still have more faith than before. My course is clear and I have no fear. The truth will come out, maybe tomorrow, maybe next year, maybe in five years, but it will come out and prove my innocence. I only wish the people of the United States would know me as I am and not as I have been made out."

A man who has seen scores of prisoners pace the death house cells here also had his eyes on Hauptmann when the news arrived. The man is Col. Mark O. Kimberling, principal keeper of the prison. He, too, said Hauptmann was icy and calm in this hour of disappointment.

"There have been a lot of stories," Kimberling said, "that Hauptmann was a mental and physical wreck. They aren't true and I am telling you the truth. I think his lawyers warned him not to expect too much from the Supreme Court and he was perfectly calm today."

Date to Be Set Soon.

The best legal opinion here believes Hauptmann will know by the week-end the exact date of his electrocution. Justice Thomas W. Trenchard, who presided at the Hauptmann trial, will be called upon to fix the date.

Law provides that the execution must be not less than four weeks or more than eight weeks from the time of the resentencing. That means that Hauptmann, all other factors being equal, probably will be electrocuted in January.

In that time Hauptmann's lawyers can get busy on their eleventh-hour fight to save his life. They can do two things:

1. Go before Justice Trenchard and ask for a new trial on the grounds that new evidence has been found.

2. Go before the New Jersey Court of Pardons and try to convince its eight members that there is sufficient doubt of Hauptmann's guilt to commute the death sentence to imprisonment. Even should the court reject that plea, Gov. Harold G. Hoffman has the power to reprieve Hauptmann for 90 days.

Hoffman Talks With Witness.

By the Associated Press.

Trenton, N. J., Dec. 9.—Gov. Harold G. Hoffman disclosed today he recently conferred with Dr. Erasmus Hudson, New York physician and fingerprint expert, who testified for the defense at Flemington that he could find no fingerprints of Bruno Richard Hauptmann on the Lindbergh kidnap ladder.

The conference, held two weeks ago and attended by Ellis H. Parker, chief of Burlington County detectives, was apparently surrounded with as much secrecy as the governor's nocturnal visit to Hauptmann's death house cell on October 17.

The governor's announcement gave fresh heart to Hauptmann's attorneys and softened the shock of the United States Supreme Court's decision not to review the Flemington trial.

Shortly before the governor told of Dr. Hudson's visit he conferred with Egbert Rosecrans, defense counsel. Rosecrans said later he and his associates probably will ask for a new trial on the basis of newly discovered evidence.

Rosecrans said his conference was on legal aspects of the case.

routine orders, then released the rest in written form. Buried down in the list, newspapermen found the following scant but final reference:

"582—Hauptmann vs. the State of New Jersey—the application for a writ of certiorari in this case is denied."

There was not a ripple in the quiet courtroom, but word of the ruling quickly spread through the building, was flashed to New Jersey and swiftly reached the cell of the man convicted of lifting Baby Lindbergh from a crib in his Sourland Mountain home, murdering the child and collecting a rich ransom from his famous father.

Bruno's loyal wife, Ann, was reported as displaying the same faith she showed through the trial and conviction of her husband, observing:

"I do know that despite everything, he will come home again."

In refusing to review the case, the Supreme Court decided, in effect, that Hauptmann had had a fair trial. It was recalled here that the court seldom has interfered in criminal cases of this kind.

Whether the court's finding was unanimous, or whether there was a split among the justices, may never be known, as the vote on such matters is rarely made public. The court is thought to have reached its decision Saturday.

He said it "might be better" to have new evidence come before the court of pardons, of which the governor is an ex-officio member, instead of Supreme Court Justice Thomas W. Trenchard.

C. Lloyd Fisher, another of Hauptmann's attorneys, declined to reveal what the new evidence might be, but said there will be "disclosures more or less startling."

Thaw Is Safe After Crashing In Rescue Ship

New Plane Ready for Expedition Hunting Ellsworth, Lost Explorer.

By the Associated Press.

Atlanta, Dec. 9.—Pilot Russell W. Thaw's flight to deliver a rescue plane to search for Lincoln Ellsworth, missing Antarctic explorer, ended in a clump of trees here today, but word came from Kansas City that another ship awaited him there as a replacement.

The heavily powered low-wing monoplane that Thaw flew here Saturday from Caldwell, N. J., plowed into the trees on the border of Candler Field when the motor failed on the take-off today. Neither Thaw nor his mechanic, William Henry Klenke, jr., was hurt.

Wings of the plane were damaged and its landing gear smashed. Thaw said it would be dismantled and shipped back to the factory in California.

He and Klenke planned to take an airliner tonight for Kansas City, carrying with them the damaged ship's special equipment for Arctic flying. Thaw said he could not discuss his plans for the future, but officials at Candler Field here said they were informed the equipment would be transferred to another plane at Kansas City and the flight continued.

Roosevelt Is Interested.

At Kansas City T. W. A. officials said the Northrup Aircraft Corporation, of Los Angeles, had arranged to put at Thaw's disposal a craft in storage there similar to the damaged plane. They said they understood it would be used by Thaw to continue his flight to South America.

State Department efforts to assist Lincoln Ellsworth in Antarctica were spurred yesterday by an indication from President Roosevelt that he was personally interested in the matter.

The department, which has been in constant touch with Ellsworth's New York representatives, has coordinated American rescue efforts with those of the British and Australian governments. Through the courtesy of the Chilean government the relief ship Wyatt Earp, now at Magellanes, has been able to prepare for the Antarctic trip. The British have offered the use of the Discovery II, which has been sent to an Australian port for possible use in the search.

Lithuanian Protest To Berlin Reported

Berlin, Dec. 9 (AP).—The Lithuanian minister to Berlin, it was stated authoritatively, protested today against the alleged arrest of a Lithuanian police sergeant named Kausa at Tilsit, East Prussia, December 6. It was reported the Lithuanian minister demanded an investigation and the immediate release of the sergeant.

A reliable source said the minister charged that German officials lured Kausa across the border from Lithuania in connection with a fictitious case, and said that his subsequent fate was not known.

Italian Officer Found Slain in Rio de Janeiro

Rio de Janeiro, Dec. 9 (AP).—Police today disclosed that Lieut. Hugo Barbiano, secretary to the military attache of the Italian Embassy, was found dead in his apartment yesterday. The Italian officer had been stabbed to death.

The police said they were investigating to determine if it were murder.

Mooney Closes Case In New Liberty Fight

San Francisco, Dec. 9 (AP).—Thomas J. Mooney closed his case today in the habeas corpus hearing before Supreme Court Referee A. E. Shaw by which he hopes to win freedom from his conviction of complicity in the 1916 preparedness day bombing. The case was adjourned until January 20 when the State will present its side.

Bridegroom Killed As Parachute Fails

Wife of Two Weeks Sees Jumper Fall to Death.

By the Associated Press.

Amelia Courthouse, Va., Dec. 9.—Tommy Estisto, 40, Vineland, N. J., parachute jumper and a bridegroom of two weeks, plunged more than 1,000 feet to his death here today when his 'chute failed to open during a jump he made "just for the fun of it." His bride watched from the ground as he fell.

Estisto, known as Tommy Moore in flying circles, went up with James Barnes, Amelia pilot, and circled the airport several times at an altitude of 1,000 feet. Then Barnes, said, the man bailed out wearing two 'chutes. When the first failed to function he was too close to the ground for the second to check the fall, Barnes said.

Estisto and his bride had come here on a honeymoon trip. He had performed at fairs in Virginia.

Fall Has Pneumonia; Family's Fear Grows

El Paso, Tex., Dec. 9 (AP).—Development of bronchial pneumonia increased concern of relatives tonight for Albert B. Fall, Secretary of the Interior in President Harding's Cabinet.

Fall, who resigned from office after being criticized for executing oil leases and later served a prison term for accepting a bribe, came here several weeks ago for his health. He exhibited disturbing symptoms last night, but rallied early today. Then hospital authorities announced the new ailment. Fall is 74.

Woman Confesses Slaying Dentist

'Not a Bit Sorry,' Police Quote Her as Saying.

By the Associated Press.

Los Angeles, Dec. 9.—Stocky Mrs. Mabel Frankie Willys, 38, who boasted she once was a "good looker," although now "not much for a man to go wild about," was quoted tonight by Patrolman William Agner as confessing the hammer slaying of Dr. Walter F. Hammond, 62, a dentist.

"I'm not a bit sorry," she told Agner after charging that Dr Hammond, with whom she had lived for eight years, beat her yesterday prior to the slaying.

"I couldn't stand for him to have a lot of girls around his office and not let me in," the 170-pound woman explained.

"Come in boys, let's talk it over," Agner quoted her as saying when police arrived at the house.

"You'll find the body in the bedroom."

Polygamy Trial Is Persecution, Cult Declares

Leaders Defend 'Religion' as Plural Wives Case Opens in Arizona.

By the Associated Press.

Kingman, Ariz., Dec. 9.—The cry "religious persecution" was raised today as the first of two members of Arizona's colony of asserted polygamists went on trial for "open and notorious cohabitation" with "plural wives."

The long-awaited trial got under way as rawboned I. C. Spencer stepped forward from among a crowd of hardy settlers who traveled 400 miles from the mountain colony of Short Creek.

He was accompanied into the Mohave County court by Price Johnson, another cultist, who will be tried later.

Sylvia Allred, third defendant, was not present. Her trial was postponed because she is an expectant mother.

"It's religious persecution," protested Bishop John Y. Barlow, of the Short Creek cult, as the primitive throng clustered about the courthouse before the case was called. He said the colonists are "the last of the old Mormons who still believe in plural wives."

Charges were brought by Mohave County Attorney E. Elmo Bollinger after he investigated reports that two women of the colony of about 25 families stated in applications for Government relief that they were "plural wives."

Bollinger declared the cultists were "merely satisfying their lusts under the name of religion."

Spencer, 50-year-old farmer, appeared unconcerned as attorneys questioned prospective jurors. He remained quietly in the background until the case was called, moving forward then to the counsel table.

Among the State witnesses will be Urban Colvin, a former Short Creek resident. He is expected to tell of cult practices.

'Count' Is Jailed As Head of Big Fake-Bill Ring

Miller Given 20 Years in N.Y.; Gang Allegedly Passed Notes.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Dec. 9.—Robert V. Miller, who was accused of directing a group that in five years distributed more than $2,000,000 in spurious currency, was sentenced to 20 years in a Federal prison today and officials said he will be sent to Alcatraz Island in San Francisco Bay.

The 46-year-old European adventurer, who called himself "Count Victor Lustig" and who has on his record an escape from the Federal house of detention here, pleaded guilty during his trial last week to counterfeiting, passing bogus bills and wilful escape.

William Watts, who also pleaded guilty on counterfeiting indictments and then testified against Miller, was sentenced to ten years in Northeastern Penitentiary at Lewisburg, Pa. Each defendant was also fined $1,000.

The courtroom was heavily guarded.

Miller was credited by Government attorneys with having had hundreds of passers, of whom 410 have been captured and 226 convicted, their sentences to date totaling 486 years.

Miller posed as a window washer and then lowered himself to freedom from the house of detention, theretofore considered escape-proof, two months ago. He was captured in Pittsburgh and returned here.

Vice Probe Follows Night Club Killings

Grand Jury Called in Tulsa Okla. Investigation.

By the Associated Press.

Tulsa, Okla., Dec. 9.—The night-club slayings of an internal revenue officer and a former policeman touched off a grand jury investigation and a State campaign here against vice today.

Mac Q. Williamson, State's attorney general, sent here at the request of Gov. E. W. Marland, told four district judges that "men high in the community are involved" in gambling and vice conditions. Calling of the grand jury followed.

A sheriff's deputy was among four persons charged with bookmaking after a raid today. Sheriff Garland Marrs said the deputy, Ed Smittle, was dismissed from his staff after the raid "because he went to the office to place a bet."

Louis Pappan, internal revenue agent, and George Stewart, former police captain, were slain under mysterious circumstances at the Sheridan night club here Wednesday.

Coal Mine Blast Kills 16 in Alberta

56 Others Escape in Fire at Second Shaft.

By the Associated Press.

Coalhurst, Albrta, Dec. 9.—An explosion in the Lethbridge Collieries, Ltd., mine today caused the deaths of 16 miners. Their bodies were recovered late tonight.

Rescue squads worked for hours to reach the men after the blast occurred. The miners were trapped on the 600-foot level far from the entrance.

Fourteen miners reached the surface, but three were seriously injured.

In a previous disaster today fifty-six miners escaped through an air shaft at the Kent coal mine, 4 miles east of Edmonton, earlier today when a surface fire destroyed the hoist house and put elevators out of commission.

Coalhurst is about 10 miles northwest of Letherbridge.

business in Minnesota five years ago and almost at once became involved in political controversies.

His Midwest American, a Minneapolis weekly, vigorously assailed the administration of Gov. Floyd Olson recently, and the many disputes in which he had become involved caused Liggett to charge a "frame-up" when he went on trial a few weeks ago on a statutory charge involving a minor girl. He won acquittal in the Ramsey County District Court.

Storm Center for Five Years.

Liggett had won wide attention to his case by appeals alleging his enemies were attempting to suppress his publication.

The Weekly American was originally published at Red Wing, later moved to Rochester, and then a little more than year ago its equipment was brought to Minneapolis.

Vigorous in Writings.

Always a vigorous foeman in his writings, Liggett had earned a variety of enmities, and police began a close check of all phases of his career to seek a motive for his death.

Liggett's newspaper and magazine career took him from Alaska to New York City and back to his native State, Minnesota, where perhaps the most turbulent phases of his life took place.

He was managing editor of the Skagway Alaskan from 1908 to 1910. From 1911 to 1915 he was publisher of the Pasco (Washington) Progress. He was managing editor of the Fargo (N. Dark.) Courier-News in 1917-1918.

Articles Created Stir.

Walter W. Liggett's articles which appeared in a magazine in 1929 and 1930 created a stir in Washington and throughout the country. These stories purported to describe liquor conditions and related alleged facts of police and official corruption.

After his expose of conditions in Washington, Liggett was summoned to appear before a District grand jury. In his testimony before this body late in 1929, he stated that dry Washington consumed 32,000 gallons of alcohol weekly. Early the next year he was called before the House Judiciary Committee to testify in regard to his knowledge of liquor conditions.

Liggett also wrote a series of articles on Washington's unsolved crimes, including the Mary Baker murder and the Scrivener murder. In these he charged the District police with inefficiency, revealing what he said were the true facts in the cases.

Debt-Burdened Man Slays Self, Wife, Two Sons

His Body, Found in Auto, Leads to Discovery of Three in Home.

By the Associated Press.

Omaha, Nebr., Dec. 9.—Charles A. Cobb, 41, today killed his wife, his two sons and himself, because, he said in a note, he could no longer stand the heavy debt burden that faced him.

Cobb was found dead in his automobile. Beside him was his hunting dog. Monoxide gas conducted into the car through a tube attached to the exhaust pipe had killed both.

Police, finding the Cobb home locked, smashed in a door and discovered the bodies of Mrs. Cobb and the boys, Robert, 12, and Charles, jr., 11. The mother and her sons lay dead in separate bedrooms.

On the living room mantle was a note reading "Rose (Mrs. Cobb) went to sleep first, then Robert and last Chubby (Charles)."

Later detectives found a second note—an eight-page one—in which Cobb said "I am going to take the lives of those most dear to me in as painless a manner as possible."

The note explained the debt burden that faced Cobb, a telegraph company employe for 19 years, and his despair at the family's lack of funds.

Security Act Is Topic.

Continuing its discussions of application and effects of the District social security act, the National Capital Controllers Association held a dinner and round-table meeting at the Hamilton Hotel last night. Damage $2,000,000 In Houston Flood Several Feared Drowned as Waters Recede.

By the Associated Press.

Houston, Tex., Dec. 9.—Property loss was estimated at upward of $2,000,000 tonight after this city's most destructive flood in years.

One man was known to have drowned in the raging waters of Buffalo Bayou before the tide began receding today. Several others were feared drowned.

The exact number of victims may never be known. There were unconfirmed reports of the drowning of a white man, a white boy, a Negro man and two Negro children.

Heaviest damage was to warehouses and business establishments in the 15-block area inundated along the bayou. They were stocked to capacity for Christmas trade.

One three-story brick building collapsed in the torrent.

1,000 Manchus Invade Chahar; Clash Reported

Fighting Follows Student Protest of North China Autonomy.

By the Associated Press.

Peiping (Tuesday), Dec. 10.—Fighting between Manchukuoan forces and the Chahar peace preservation corps in southeastern Chahar Province was reported today by Chinese sources.

The advices said the clash occurred when a Manchukuoan detachment of 1,000 troops invaded the Kuyuan district, east of Kalgan.

It followed an angry demonstration in Peiping yesterday by 6,000 students, who shouted against the autonomy movement in north China and demanded mobilization of the army and navy for war on Japan.

Lieut. Col. Tan Takasashi, Japanese military attache here, made strong representations in a call on Mayor Chin Teh-Chun.

The student demonstration was the first such event in years. Thirty were arrested and many hurt in a clash with police.

Marching into the central shopping district after having been dispersed once, the students carried handbills and banners denouncing the autonomy program. Under it, they said, "China will be split and will become a colony."

Compromise Settlement.

Police and firemen drenched the students with icy water and the demonstration finally was broken up. Authorities closed the city gates to prevent 1,000 other students from neighboring institutions from entering.

Despite the demonstration, the official Central News Agency said, the establishment of a political council for Hopeh and Chawar provinces, after a compromise settlement in the autonomy movement, probably would be announced soon.

The students denounced the Chinese program of Foreign Minister Koki Hirota, of Japan.

This program, which the national government at Nanking has agreed to consider, includes:

1. Suppression of anti-Japanese activities in China.

2. Practical co-operation of China and Japan with the government of Manchukuo.

3. Joint measures by those three countries to check communism.

The Japanese army continued to mass troops at strategic northern points, while factional strife raged among the organizers of the projected Hopeh-Chahar political council. Additional Japanese soldiers arrived yesterday at Tungchow, 15 miles east of here.

Tungchow Capital.

Tungchow is capital of the new East Hopeh autonomous state. The Nanking government has been deluged with Chinese demands for a punitive expedition against this state, which probably will be absorbed by the Hopeh-Chawar state.

The central government has been reported authoritatively to have made three stipulations in granting a measure of autonomy to the Hopeh-Chahar political council, as follows:

That Nanking will retain control over foreign affairs, financial, military and judicial matters; that all appointments will be made by Nanking, and that there would be no actual independence for the area.

Japanese sources said these demands were "face savers" for Nanking, and that the new council would enjoy virtual autonomy.

Text of Davis Address to the London Naval Conference

By the Associated Press.

London, Dec. 9.—The text of the opening address of Norman Davis, chairman of the United States delegation to the naval conference which convened today, follows:

Mr. chairman:

In searching for appropriate words in which to express most clearly the attitude and aspirations of the American Government and people in respect to naval disarmament, I find that I cannot improve upon the letter of guidance which the President addressed to me 14 months ago when I sailed for London to participate in preliminary conversations between the governments of the United Kingdom, Japan and the United States. That letter, written on October 5, 1934, was as follows:

"In asking you to return to London to continue and expand the conversations begun last June preparatory to the naval conference in 1935, I am fully aware of the gravity of the problems before you and your British and Japanese colleagues. The object of next year's conference is 'to frame a new treaty to replace and carry out the purposes of the present treaty.' The purposes themselves are 'to prevent the dangers and to reduce the burdens inherent in competitive armament' and 'to carry forward the work begun by the Washington Naval Conference and to facilitate progressive realization of general limitation and reduction of armament.'

"The Washington Naval Conference of 1922 brought to the world the first important voluntary agreement for limitation and reduction of armament. It stands out as a milestone in civilization.

"It was supplemented by the London Naval Treaty of 1930, which recognized the underlying thought that the good work begun should be progressive—in other words, that further limitation and reduction should be sought.

"Today the United States adheres to that goal. That must be our first consideration.

Naval Cuts Proposed.

"The Washington and London treaties were not mere mathematical formulae. The limitations fixed on the relative naval forces were based on the comparative defensive needs of the powers concerned; they did not involve the sacrifice of any vital interests on the part of their participants; they left the relative security of the great naval powers unimpaired.

"The abandonment of these treaties would throw the principle of relative security wholly out of balance; it would result in competitive naval building, the consequence of which no one can foretell.

"I ask you, therefore, at the first opportunity to propose to the British and Japanese a substantial proportional reduction in the present naval levels. I suggest a total tonnage reduction of 20 per cent below existing treaty tonnage. If it is not possible to agree on this percentage, please seek from the British and Japanese a lesser reduction—15 per cent or 10 per cent or 5 per cent. The United States must adhere to the high purpose of progressive reduction. It will be a heartening thing to the people of the world if you and your colleagues can attain this end.

"Only if all else fails should you seek to secure agreement providing for the maintenance and extension of existing treaties over as long a period as possible.

"I am compelled to make one other point clear. I cannot approve, nor would I be willing to submit to the Senate of the United States any new treaty calling for larger navies. Governments impelled by common sense and the good of humanity ought to seek treaties reducing armaments; they have no right to seek treaties increasing armaments.

Arms Danger Cited.

"Excessive armaments are in themselves conducive to those fears and suspicions which breed war. Competition in armament is a still greater menace. The world would rightly reproach Great Britain, Japan and the United States if we moved against the current of progressive thought. We three nations, the principal naval powers, have nothing to fear from one another. We cannot escape our responsibilities, joint and several, for world peace and recovery.

"I am convinced that if the basic principle of continued naval limitation with progressive reduction can be adhered to this year and next, the technicalities of ship tonnage, of ship classes, of gun calibers and of other weapons, can be solved by friendly conference. I earnestly hope that France and Italy, which are full parties to the Washington Treaty, will see their way to participate fully in our efforts to achieve further naval limitation and reduction.

"The important matter to keep constantly before your eyes is the principle of reduction—the maintenance of one of the greatest achievements of friendly relations between nations.

"Sincerely yours,
(Signed)
"FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT."

The views set forth in this letter are still expressive of what the United States would like to see accomplished. Therein, there has been no change. But it would be unrealistic not to recognize that the situation existing at the time the letter was written has undergone considerable modification. The conversations last year were based on the London Naval Treaty, due to expire by automatic limitation at the end of 1936.

Since then the Washington Treaty has been denounced and will expire at the close of next year; certain fundamental principles on which both treaties rest have been questioned; in the wake of the political instability in various parts of the world, there is a tendency to increase rather than reduce naval armaments; and the divergences which have developed are such as to increase the difficulties which confront us in seeking to reach agreement for a comprehensive naval limitation.

Retain Treaty Benefits.

The first step toward overcoming these difficulties is to face them frankly. The next step is to concentrate on these fundamental elements of mutual interest and accord which brought us together here and which unite us, despite the real differences that have developed.

Our nations are apparently at one in desiring the continuance of naval limitation and reduction by international treaty—a principle adopted for the first time in history in 1922 and successful for a dozen years beyond any means of measurement. At the time of the Washington Conference we were still in the shadow of the World War. War-weary peoples who had experienced the consequences of strife and discord were longing for peace and recovery and praying for an era of stability and good will. The Washington treaties and the later London Treaty were in harmony with this profound wish. Through them, mankind was freed from the threatening nightmare of a race in naval armaments.

Why should we now abandon the invaluable mutual benefits conferred on the participating peoples by the naval treaties, when the world is just beginning to emerge from the economic depression which has held it in its grip for the past six years and when it is all the more necessary not further to disturb international relationships and retard or disrupt economic recovery through a naval race. No nation desires to enter such a race—no government can afford the responsibility for anaugurating it. Our task during the coming weeks is to make it unnecessary.

One means of accomplishing this would be to agree upon a renewal of existing treaties with such modifications as circumstances may require. Failing this we should at any rate make every endeavor, through a frank and friendly exchange of views, to discover other paths to mutual understanding, which would at least prevent a naval race and avoid a disturbance of the equilibrium, and thus pave the way for a later more permanent and comprehensive treaty.

U. S. Pledges Co-operation.

Whatever our approach our objective must be to insure that in the difficult and trying years ahead of us the essential balance between our fleets, which during the past years has proved such a guarantee of peace and stability, should be maintained by means of mutual agreement rather than by expensive and dangerous competition which can profit no one, but must harm all.

On behalf of my Government I declare emphatically that the United States will not take the initiative in naval competition. We want no naval increase. We want limitation and reduction. Our present building program, which is essentially one of replacement, is consistent with this desire. For ten years we ceased naval construction.

Under our present plans the strengths alloted to us by the London Treaty as of the end of 1936 will not be attained until 1942. We have no wish to exceed those treaty limits. I may say also that the United States which is now definitely on the way to recovery from the severe depression through which it has been going, and from which no nation has escaped, is most anxious to devote its energies and material resources to the upbuilding of the country.

However great the difficulties that confront us in this conference, we are here to help remove them. With good will and patience on the part of all we can find a mutually beneficial solution. I pledge the American delegation's full co-operation toward this end.

French, British Await Il Duce's Reply on Peace

Paris Believes 'Showdown' Near Oil Ban Session May Be Put Ahead.

By the Associated Press.

London, Dec. 9 (AP).—Great Britain's cabinet today gave speedy approval to a joint Anglo-French plan for peace in Africa.

The cabinet met late in the day for one hour to study the proposal, drafted in Paris yesterday by Premier Laval and Sir Samuel Hoare, British foreign secretary.

The League of Nations Committee of 18 on sanctions may be called into session Wednesday to discuss the Anglo-French peace plan, it was stated authoritatively here.

The committee is scheduled to meet Thursday to take up oil and other proposed sanctions, but developments here and in Paris are likely to force an earlier meeting, it was said.

Britain's approval of the proposal was sent to Paris and it was expected it would be sent to Rome, Addis Ababa and Geneva tomorrow.

Paris, Dec. 9 (AP).—French officials, expecting a quick answer from Premier Mussolini on an Anglo-French African peace plan, said tonight events of the next two days would determine whether there will be continued war or peace on Ethiopia's soil.

Through the peace plan, French officials said, a "showdown" has come in the war crisis.

Informed quarters said Il Duce already is in possession of the program.

Both French and British officials indicated their accord extended to all European questions as well as to the Italo-Ethiopian war.

If Italy rejects the plan, it was said by high French sources, it will mark the beginning of an even closer Franco-British stand behind the League of Nations.

If, however, Il Duce indicates he is willing to talk peace, Paris expects postponement by the League of Nations of an oil embargo against Italy.

The plan is based on exchanges of territory between Italy and Ethiopia. Italy would give Ethiopia a port in Eritrea and take part of the territory already conquered near the Fascist colonies of Eritrea and Somaliland.

Premier Laval called a meeting of the cabinet for tomorrow morning to hear an outline of the peace plan.

The government decided today to float a 2,000,000,000 franc ($132,000,000) national defense loan tomorrow.

Japan Refuses U. S. Proposal For Naval Cut

President Roosevelt's views on naval disarmament on October 5, 1934, prior to preliminary conferences between Great Britain, the United States and Japan.

Then Mr. Roosevelt suggested "a total tonnage" reduction of 20 per cent below existing treaty tonnage;" if this was impossible, a reduction of 15, 10 or 5 per cent, and "only if all else fails" an agreement for the extension of existing treaties "over as long a period as possible."

The British Prime Minister, Stanley Baldwin, proposed that the principles of the Washington and London treaties, which expire next year, be retained. But, he suggested, they should be modified to consider "altered international circumstances and the needs of individual powers."

He referred to the "naval powers not represented here"—an indication, observers believed, that Germany and the Soviet Union may later be asked to participate in any new treaty.

Baldwin made it plain his nation attached the "greatest importance" to limitation both of total fleet tonnages and the weight and armament of the various types of ships. He urged an agreement to halt "unrestricted submarine warfare" in the future.

France, through her London ambassador, Charles Corbin, raised the question of limiting land and air armaments.

Corbin pledged even reduction in the maximum tonnage and gun calibers in various classes of ships, but warned the total tonnage issue must "raise the general problem of the three categories of armaments."

Italy, non-committal on its position, referred, nevertheless, to the sanctions situation growing out of her war on Ethiopia. Ambassador Dino Grandi, chief Fascist delegate, reminded the conference that "my government is compelled to take carefully into account the present situation which has been created by the attitude of many States belonging to the League of Nations with regard to my country."

Italy, he said, would on no account abandon her principal aim—"to avoid an armament race."

Nagano's brief address was regarded as exceptionally conciliatory. He asked a "just and fair agreement on disarmament" and supported Prime Minister Baldwin's plea for an accord to prevent the "misuse" of submarines.

Tokyo Calls U. S. Selfish.

By the Associated Press.

Tokyo (Tuesday), Dec. 10.—A naval spokesman, commenting on the opening of the navl conference in London yesterday, said today that the American suggestion of a 20 per cent reduction in navies was "highly selfish, although parading in the beautiful guise of disarmament."

The reaction of officials, as well as of the Japanese press, did not disclose the slightest indications of willingness to compromise on the primary Japanese demand of parity or to consider favorably proposals of other powers.

and clubs—evidence of a recent clash between rioters and police.

Rioters Burn Bus.

Students rioted early today in the Rhoda Hospital neighborhood. They burned an auto bus and smashed lamp posts. Police dispersed them after numerous skirmishes. Part of the mob took up positions on the Nile embankments at the end of Abbas Bridge, where Saturday's fighting occurred.

Backed up by the new decree permitting them to shoot at rioters, police were determined to maintain order. Truck loads of officers, armed with carbines, patrolled the streets. They swung batons ruthlessly to break up gatherings. Numerous native Arabs were arrested when they refused to move on.

A recheck of yesterday's casualties showed that 20 students were wounded, mostly by buckshot aimed at their legs. Seventy-five were arrested yesterday.

Suit to Block Ban On Oil Postponed

U. S. Attoney Unable to Find Embargo 'Order.'

By the Associated Press.

New York, Dec. 9.—Assistant United States Attorney Frances Horan announced that an action to prevent the munitions export control board from banning oil shipments to Italy was put over today by agreement of counsel until December 17.

The action, an application for an injunction ordering the board to refrain from prohibiting oil shipments to Italy, was begun in Federal Court here a week ago by Philip Giordano.

It was based on an alleged order by the State Department and munitions board to cease oil shipments to Italy.

"I haven't yet been able to find the order on which the suit is brought," Horan said today.

Army Planes 'Destroy' Port in Air Maneuvers

Miami, Fla., Dec. 9 (AP).—Great Army bombers massing over defenseless Port Tampa today "destroyed" shipping and harbor facilities. Sixteen planes in theory heavily laden with destructive missiles pounded on the unsuspecting port after flying from Vero Beach, headquarters of the First Wing, GHQ Air Force, during the current Florida maneuvers.

Recrossing Florida after "reducing" the West Coast port to "smoking ruins," the bombers joined with attack craft from Fort Pierce in pitched battle with pursuit planes defending the Miami area.

Court Rules Howard's Buildings Not Public

Howard University's dormitories are not "public buildings" of the United States, the United States Supreme Court ruled yesterday, agreeing with the United States Court of Appeals. The fact that the Negro institution here is under the control of the Interior Department made no difference, it held in effect.

Ruling came in the suit of R. Bland Phelps, local stone contractor, against the Maiatico Construction Co., in which Phelps and other creditors of the company sought to collect $70,000 due out of the original $470,000 cost of the dormitory, built in 1932, by getting back a bond the company had given the Government.

Bates Talk Is Given To Hard of Hearing

Sanford Bates, president of the Washington Council of Social Agencies, spoke last night to an audience that couldn't hear him.

At least it couldn't have heard him if it hadn't been for a new device the Washington League for the Hard of Hearing had installed in the auditorium at 1116 Vermont avenue northwest for the first time. It was a hearing apparatus linked to a microphone into which Bates spoke. All the audience had to do was to connect the apparatus, or, as Bates smilingly noted, "cut me off."

Note Suit Rejected.

The Supreme Court yesterday refused to review a lower court ruling in the suit by Nannie Counselman, who sought to collect four notes for $2,000 from Rufus F. Pitzer. Both Miss Counselman and Pitzer contended they were sold the same notes by the Park Savings Bank, which later closed.

1111 Oak Avenue, Silver Spring, Md.
Telephone, Shepherd 2363.

Reductions in telephone rates, effective next month although not yet announced formally by the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co., were disclosed to the Montgomery County Civic Federation last night by its public utilities chairman, Maj. L. L. Dye, of Garrett Park.

Dye said the company had advised him the reductions would apply to the Shepherd and Wisconsin exchanges, in Silver Spring and Bethesda, respectively, and that they would affect single-party private telephones.

In the first zone, rates would be cut from $5 a month to $4.75. In outlying districts they would be cut from $6 a month to $5.25. A few minor mileage readjustments also would be made.

The federation met in Bethesda School. Action included a request for filling in and paving of Wisconsin avenue in Bethesda, where the street-car tracks have been torn up. The federation argued two hours over the suggested construction of a bus center on Connecticut avenue at Chevy Chase Circle and finally decided to table the question, 28 to 18.

In a report of the aims and objects committee, Miss Lavinia Engle, chairman, announced that the committee would function in three classes, organization, finance and program. She said it is the committee's aim to establish a campaign fund of $1,500 by August of 1936. The forming of a school for workers and the presentation to New Deal agencies for study of matters affecting Maryland are two projects the committee hoped to carry out.

Activities of various clubs throughout the county were reported by the following women: Mrs. C. Y. Latimer, Takoma Park Club; Mrs. Ralph W. Berry, Chevy Chase, Md.; Miss Olivia Knight, of the Leland Club; Mrs. W. Ernest Offutt, of Rockville Club, and Mrs. C. E. Roach, of Friendship Heights.

The meeting was followed by a luncheon at which Mrs. Emily Newell Blair, former vice chairman of the Democratic national committee and chairman of the consumers advisory committee, was the guest speaker.

Stating that women's main object in politics is to improve social conditions, Mrs. Blair urged her audience to make every effort to readjust the social problems. The Democratic Party, she said, offers problems to be solved by experiments, but the opposing party is just satisfied to be where they were and offer no alternative. She described women's rise in political careers, encouraging them to contribute their knowledge to the Government.

Distinguished guests at the meeting were Mrs. M. L. Wilson, wife of the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture; Mrs. Donald Richberg, wife of the former Director of the N. R. Miss Ruth Shoemaker, member of the Maryland House of Delegates, and Miss Lavinia Engle, diretcor of the Maryland League of Women Voters and former member of the House of Delegates.

Cissel-Saxon unit, American Legion Auxiliary of Silver Spring, Md., will meet tonight at 8 o'clock at the home of Mrs. Lauman T. Faulconer. Plans will be discussed for the usual Christmas work of the group among needy veterans' families.

Hester Walker Beall Provensen will read "The Other Wise Man" at a meeting of the Parent-Teachers Association of Chevy Chase Elementary School tonight.

Prologue To Battle.

Again President Roosevelt has demonstrated his keen political sagacity, by timing a major address on the AAA to coincide with the flurry over the opening of the crucial test of AAA before the Supreme Court of the United States. The Chicago address was typical of his best campaign manner, and may, in fact, be considered his first salvo of heavy artillery fire in the Battle of 1936.

The increasing talk about Gov. Landon as a possible opponent, as well as other gathering symptoms, indicates that the strategy of 1936 will center about the putative aspirations of the agricultural Middle West. Using Chicago, the capital of corn and hogs, as an imposing rostrum, Mr. Roosevelt therefore directed his remarks out across the Grand Prairie of Illinois, down toward the Wabash, out over the Mississippi, to the Missouri, and on toward the Rockies, with side glances toward the Southern cotton farmers as well as the Minnesotans and North Dakotans, who may chiefly feel the effects of the Canadian treaty.

The President has a subtle knack of accusing his opponents of what his opponents are accusing him, and sometimes doing it first. And so, since no Administration in many years has done so much to arouse class against class, he vehemently denounces his own opponents as being fomentors of class prejudice. In doing so, he yesterday wove a masterful presentation of the values of interdependence.

No one can, or desires, to dispute the thesis that agricultural prosperity is fundamental to general prosperity. It is a most obvious and useful point. It would seem, therefore, that Mr. Roosevelt didn't leave his opponents much to chew on. His address was adroit, even though it did not go deeply into the economics and the facts of the case. For instance, he adopted the usual AAA thesis of taking all credit for higher farm prices. At such times listeners forget that the processing taxes are far from paying for the crop benefits, and nobody has yet dared to predict whether this procedure can go on indefinitely.

It is to be remembered that the drought was the principal cause of high prices, and that drought-suffering farmers received crop benefits and other relief even though they did not raise crops upon which to levy processing taxes. Therefore the benefit to agriculture as a whole should be reckoned on the basis of the net sum received for farm crops, deducting Government payments, and not the gross. Those in favored areas received higher prices because of the failures of those in drought areas. It is only fair, therefore, to make such a deduction.

Perhaps it would not be entirely irrelevant to suggest that the greatest favor the New Deal could do to agriculture would be to remove the feeling of apprehension and fear from the business world, so that idle men will be put back on the pay rolls and the buying power of the country, in normal fashion, be restored in greater measure. The farmer, as the President has ably contended, has a tremendous stake in the welfare of business as a whole.

The A. A. U. Vote.

By the narrowest of margins the Amateur Athletic Union of the United States has gone on record in favor of American participation in the Olympic Games, thereby removing the last official barrier in the way of American representation at Berlin next summer. But consent is given in a manner that can give little comfort to the Nazis.

Aside from the close vote which finally defeated the nonparticipation proposal, the German hosts will read in the resolution adopted by the A. A. U. two biting criticisms of Hitlerism. The Olympic officials are called upon to maintain "vigilance" for the protection of all contestants. And it is specifically noted that by sending a team the A. A. U. and the American Olympic Committee in no sense indorse the "principles or practices of the Nazi government."

In effect, then, the A. A. U. vote amounts to a declaration that the traditions of the games are more important than the character of the government under whose auspices they may happen to be held. This should do much to forestall the obvious Nazi intention to use the competition for purposes of political propaganda.

All factors considered, it is difficult to quarrel with the A. A. U.'s compromise, yet there will be widespread regret over the loss of this great opportunity to let the Germans see what the outside world thinks of their present rulers. A single boycott of this sort would have been far more effective in impressing on Germany the unanimity of American disapproval than any number of resolutions of condemnation.

The decision is certain to be misinterpreted to the people of Germany. But in spite of censorship it will be realized that the United States is participating in the games not because of, but in spite of, the fact that they are to be conducted in the shadow of the swastika, itself a denial of everything implied by the word "sportsmanship."

Industry's Responsibility.

The conference of business and labor leaders which started so unfortunately yesterday in Washington was not summoned to debate plans for reviving the NRA, nor will it be called upon to consider any specific proposals indorsed by the Government. In his opening address Maj. Berry made it clear that ideas, plans or suggestions for solving the problems of industry should be evolved out of group discussions.

The hostile attitude of many organized business groups, which assumed the conference was called to enlist support for a new NRA, may explain the present emphasis upon industry's responsibility for formulating its own program. Certainly when the idea of a conference was first broached Maj. Berry hinted broadly that interest would center about plans for revising the recovery act. However, other and larger issues than the fate of the NRA confront industry at the present time and make a general conference decidedly opportune.

A revival of business, which has renewed the confidence of certain organized groups in their ability to manage their own affairs, has increased their distaste for any proposals savoring of Government interference or regulation. This attitude could be justified if there were any assurance that a strictly "hands off" policy would provide employment for idle workers and thus eliminate the widespread economic distress and social discontent which constitute a very real menace to established political institutions. Unfortunately, the immediate outlook is far from promising.

On the eve of the conference Maj. Berry called attention to the challenge presented by the presence in this country of some 10,000,000 unemployed who, with their dependents, constitute a very large percentage of the entire population. The actual volume of unemployment, however, is less perturbing as a social phenomenon than the fact that production is making rapid strides while employment gains are very slow. Thus Maj. Berry notes that industrial production rose almost 20 per cent during a period when employment increased less than 2 per cent.

The accuracy of these figures is open to challenge, but the trend is undeniable. No industrialist who looks beyond his immediate profits can fail to be alarmed by the prospect of achieving prosperity for himself in the midst of poverty due to chronic unemployment. Any man with ordinary intelligence knows that such conditions in course of time breed disorders. At best the existence of great numbers of destitute unemployed places an obligation upon the more fortunate members of the community that cannot be shunned. Onerous taxes that handicap industry, and mounting public indebtedness that imposes burdens upon all productive agencies, are inevitable unless industry is in a position to give work and wages to employable men and women.

Furthermore, an industrial system that permanently excluded from active life a large proportion of able-bodied potential workers would forfeit its right to survive, in the opinion of most people. To state this obvious fact is not a condemnation of our existing form of industrial organization, which is recovering slowly—and against unnecessary obstacles—from the effects of a prolonged depression. But it is a warning against a refusal to discuss remedial measures. The satisfied industrialists, who simply ask to be let alone to work out their own salvation may find their desires frustrated by the very positive activities of labor leaders who are pressing for a 30-hour week and similar panaceas. Or they may discover that Congress has not waited for their approval to pass new kinds of restrictive legislation regulating their operations.

Consequently, it is not only wiser from the selfish point of view for industry to consider the challenge presented by unemployment and kindred ills, but it is in clear accordance with democratic ideals for labor and capital to discuss joint problems in open forum in the hope of reconciling differing points of view. Violent interchanges such as occurred at the opening of the convention yesterday are most unfortunate. The alternative to co-operation is class warfare, and economic progress does not follow that road.

Of course the present conference cannot expect to find an immediate solution of the difficult questions that demand attention. But labor and capital should welcome any opportunity for an exchange of ideas that holds promise in the formulation of policies for future guidance.

Unaccustomed As I Am.

As a social custom, after-dinner speaking is in a class by itself. Neither a business nor a science, there are also overwhelming reasons against considering it as an art. Nevertheless it continues to flourish and is now regarded, like head colds, as a necessary evil of civilization. In common with the cold, the most that victims of either can hope for is that each will run its course quickly.

It is welcome news, therefore, that Harvard is endeavoring to develop more diverting after-dinner speeches. The effort is to be highly practical and will take the form of a dress rehearsal in which the instructor in public speaking acts as toastmaster at a dinner for the class. Each student, in correct black tie, will deliver a speech in true that-reminds-me fashion and from this a crop of new after-dinner stories is hopefully anticipated. The talks may range from cabbages to kings, provided only that they are entertaining and sprightly.

From a humanitarian standpoint, Harvard should be congratulated. And it is refreshing to find an instructor in public speaking concerned with a more intangible quality than posture, emphasis and inflection. At the same time, it would seem that this is all a bit superfluous. If gruelling tests are needed for potential "unprepared" speakers, none more realistic could be devised than the boys' own fraternity or class dinners. What to say in after-dinner speeches may be taught by instructors. But the real test is what not to say, and this may best be learned by confronting callow youth with a ribald jury of its peers.

Peace Proposals.

At first glance the surmised terms of the Anglo-French offer to Italy, at the very considerable expense of Ethiopia, look very much like a bribe to Mussolini in order to save the face of Geneva and the collective peace system. In advance of authoritative publication of the proposals drafted in London and Paris, it is impossible to form any very definite conclusions as to their justification. But already it is apparent that they contemplate giving more territory to Italy than she has yet been able to conquer, and that the narrow corridor to the Red Sea, suggested for Ethiopia, is a rather meager offset to what that country would be expected to yield.

Closer consideration of the situation, however, tends to modify the conclusion that Ethiopia is to be sold down the river. In the first place common sense dictates the advisability of making a very generous peace offer to Italy prior to the application of sanctions on oil supplies, which are due for consideration at Geneva this week. If terms which are all in Italy's favor are rejected by that nation, the case for tightening the embargoes against the aggressor will be undeniable. There is as much of an implied threat as of a surrender to Italian strength in the Anglo-French proposals.

The right of these two powers to make these proposals can scarcely be questioned. They are not parcelling out Ethiopian territory, for Haile Selassie can refuse the terms and fight on, whether or not Mussolini accepts. The British and French, on whom will fall the major strain of handling Italy if these proposals fail, are merely stating what they jointly consider a reasonable settlement of the dispute, all elements therein considered. Presumably they would cease to supply Ethiopia with arms if that country should reject, while Italy accepts, the offer. Presumably they also feel that these terms will be accepted as reasonable by the other members of the League of Nations, for whom they are acting as agents.

Nevertheless, the British and French, in making these proposals, are missing an opportunity to make a constructive gesture of far-reaching value. If they were offering Italy some of their own colonial possessions in this area, instead of merely suggesting transfers of Ethiopian territory, the compromise would be much happier. Solution of the underlying problem of a more equitable division of imperialistic control over backward areas would thus be furthered. And if the French and British think that Italy should be entrusted with rulership over Ethiopian tribes, they can scarcely argue that Rome is incompetent to govern kindred peoples now under their own protection.

A realistic attitude demands that there shall be a compromise solution of the present war. Such a compromise, however, will be of no enduring value if it fails in certain fundamentals. In the first place the aggressor must not be given satisfaction to the detriment of his victim. In the second place the satiated imperialisms must show themselves willing to make some sacrifices to meet the arguments of those who claim that aggression is inevitable under conditions of great inequality of national opportunity.

The League of Nations cannot afford to set the seal of its approval on any settlement which is clearly deficient in regard to these two principles. It would be better for Geneva to fail in its effort to achieve a negotiated peace than to make itself a party to an accord in which all the sacrifices are demanded from a victimized member of the League, no matter how primitive its culture and civilization.

Investigation into the cause of an automobile wreck usually reveals that the car contained two vacuum tanks—one under the hood, and one over the steering wheel.

The Cost Of Government.

From The Omaha World-Herald.

The high cost of government was put in a striking way by Harper Sibley, president of the United States Chamber of Commerce, in an address at Kansas City last week:

"The annual costs of government are equivalent to two-thirds of all the wages and all the salaries received last year by all our citizens other than Government employes.

"All of the interest and all the dividends received by individuals would run Government in the United States less than four months."

It would be hard to give more forcible support of the wise utterance of Thomas Jefferson, that the power to tax is the power to destroy.

Licensed Gambling.

To the Editor of the Post—Sir: I read with interest a recent letter in The Post from E. V. Wilcox commenting on a statement made by Mrs. Agnes K. Mason, of the A. B. C. Board favoring the legalization of gambling, because, as she states, the law against gambling cannot be enforced and also because of the revenue that would be derived from licensing it.

Mr. Wilcox, like most law-abiding citizens, does not favor legalizing crime. And that is just what licensed gambling means. It would also mean the beginning of another racket in Washington and result in more crimes like the Wilson murder. It is unfortunate that some persons holding responsible positions do not realize that the very nature of their positions requires them to exercise greater discretion in making public statements. It acts as an encouragement to lawbreaking.

Are people who favor legalizing gambling also in favor of legalizing stealing because the latter cannot be stopped? Would they also enjoy having members of their own families contribute to the revenue derived by the Government? It is ridiculous to claim that the gambling laws cannot be enforced. Instead of discouraging law enforcement, those in favor of gambling should get behind the law and encourage its enforcement officers.

A Free Trader Speaks.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: What will the future historian have to say concerning the spectacle of the heads of two great nations meeting in Washington and ponderously deciding just how far the people of their respective countries may be permitted to trade with one another? Freedom of trade is an unalienable right and to interfere with it in any degree is inexcusable both from the standpoint of ethics and expediency. All countries have natural advantages which, combined with the attainment of peculiar skill in various industries, make international free trade necessary for maximum benefit for all concerned.

Incidentally, free trade is the greatest known factor for international peace and good will. Free trade over the vast area of the United States has been the greatest factor for our material progress. There is no good reason for preventing trade between the various States of the Union. The tariff has been responsible for driving hundreds of American industries across the border into Canada and Mexico. It has interfered with what is natural and right. The favors given to it by special privilege is today causing angry resentment for curtailment of same. There is only one way to provide absolute fairness to all interests and that is free trade in everything. And this will automatically put an end to the most powerful of all lobbies at Washington.

Electricity In Ottawa.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: To amplify Mr. A. W. Dew's letter in The Post of December 6: If his electric light bill in his home city in Michigan were $5.50, and the same would cost in Washington, $2.75, he would have paid around 90 cents in Ottawa.

Of course in Ottawa widows and orphans no longer have available such investment opportunities as were offered by those outstanding human benefactors referred to by your Mr. Pegler, as Big Hearted Howard Hopson and Sobbing Sam Insull—municipal ownership.

And perhaps Mr. Dew did not wish to add any more ants to the already irritated pants of the public utility men by mentioning the "more abundant life of the Canadians." In Ottawa the lower rates permit the use of many accessories as well as cooking and heating with electricity. The average household enjoys the consumption of exactly six and one-half times as much electricity as is used in the average American home.

DWIGHT T. SCOTT.

Men And Women.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: From all appearances, Mr. Woods, of Charlottesville, must hail from some such secluded man-ruled section of the mountains as involved in the Maxwell murder case, since he seems to take the criticism of the outcome of that trial as a personal affront. He strenuously objects to the freedom of women, insisting they should not be allowed to be as bad as men. Why not the other way around? Men should be expected to be as good as women.

Certainly a jury system is supposed to be a "protection for individual citizens against injustice," but he apparently believes women should not be considered "individual citizens." It just happened that in the case in question it was a girl against a man. If it had been a small man against a big man, the smaller being pursued with a knife and being beaten by the other, and had with a chance blow indirectly caused the death of the other, I suppose then the little man would be entitled to "justice" in considering his attempt to defend himself. And this is the twentieth century!

Police, Please Note.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: One night this week while I was waiting for a friend to unlock her car, I had my bag snatched from under my arm by a young white boy who ran just as fast as he could. My friend and I howled for police and help, but neither was forthcoming. Even the residents in the neighborhood did not raise a window to see if they could furnish aid.

I know that it is a most careless thing to carry one's purse under one's arm, but I have done it all my life and even when I lived in Washington, which I did until last May, I never had anything of this nature happen to me. I have been visited by detectives and police since this thing happened and they have all been most solicitous and desirous of doing all in their power to recover the bag and keys, which are, after all, the only part of the plunder which I expected I might get back.

I am writing this to you to ask you whether in my absence, Washington has deteriorated and that now when one walks the streets, one must padlock belongings on one's person?

I have traveled round the world, I have spent some time in Chicago, Buffalo, New York City, and I now live in Cincinnati. I have to come back to this beautiful city to have my purse grabbed from me.

A Rescued Kitten.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I am glad to note an increasing number of sympathetic animal stories in our local newspapers such as the appealing account in The Post of the rescue of the kitten by the police of No. 2 Precinct.

It is a sad commentary on man's "civilization" that any pitiful, little domestic creatures should stray around the streets homeless, cold, thirsty and hungry when they require so little and are eager to repay a protector so much in grateful affection and loyal companionship.

I am glad the kind-hearted police were different and "accepted service" of the kitten.

May it prove a mascot and bring its chivalrous rescuers luck—as I think it will. ANIMAL LOVER.

Italy's Signature.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The public will be surprised to learn that when, on October 12, 1933, there was signed an antiwar pact at Rio Janeiro, Italy was one of the signers. The pact was largely an American affair, but other nations were permitted to sign it. By article 2 of this pact the signatories agree "that they shall recognize no territorial arrangement not obtained through pacific means nor the validity of an occupation or acquisition of territory brought about by armed force."

Use For The Patent Office Pillars.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: When the old Patent Office Building is remodeled I assume that the large stone pillars of which there is a double row on the F street side will be removed.

I am unfamiliar with the plans for disposal of these pillars, but, since they are quite large and of good stone, they should find a place of usefulness somewhere and not be broken up and destroyed. May I make the following suggestion as to their future use:

In Washington there are now some 58 public statues as described in the literature of the National Parks Service. Of these, some 28 are erected in memory of military heroes and subjects. All the myriad aspects of our national life, science, literature, philanthropy, invention—these share the remaining memorials. Our children, too long reared in the admonition of war-loving parents and national heroes, thus have adulation of fighting men thrust upon them.

Let us take these columns and place them about the city as monuments to men whose patents and inventions have ministered to the peaceful progress of our Nation. They might be placed to fine advantage in Rock Creek Park singly or as a group, or in the triangular spaces that abound throughout the city.

The plan undoubtedly would enlist public interest and assistance in the actual placing of the pillars. Labor unions and other groups would like to honor their special benefactors in this way.

I can anticipate no real opposition, except, of course, from Gen. Fries. Quite naturally he would see communism behind each pillar so placed, but I hold that his opposition would certify the plan as decidedly worth while.

CHARLES E. PLANCK.

Washington, Dec. 6.

The Post Impressionist

Arts And Letters.

Post Office, Tuesday.

TODAY'S mail reverses a usual sequence. It starts with a tribute to a woman and ends with a visit to a money vault.

"Your column on Buffalo Bill and Annie Oakley," writes Claus Bogel, "reminds me that I was one of a committee at the Southern Athletic Club to entertain Col. Cody during a visit of his show to New Orleans. He brought several of his red chiefs in full regalia. Some rude persons stood outside, uttering war-whoops. One of my embarrassed associates told B. B.: 'The difference between your men here and those men out there is that your men just think they're Indians.'

"I am so glad you saw and liked the picture of 'Annie Oakley.' You probably know Courtney Ryley Cooper's biography of her. For my part, I failed to notice that Barbara Stanwyck's 'Annie' shot 'with both eyes open,' and I have been told that Miss Stanwyck is indeed an expert with a rifle. Anyhow, when she made her speedy entrance into the arena, I couldn't restrain a few tears: I was carried back to my boyhood days when I was madly in love with Annie. But who wasn't?"

Respectfully, we pass on to Mr. Bogel the question Loie Fuller, aged about seventy, asked us when we confessed that, as a freshman, we used to be in love with her.

"Oh," the creator of the Fire Dance rapturously mocked, "why didn't you tell me then?"

Anyhow, one who signs himself "Veritas" takes sharp issue with our shooting rules. Although subtly bebeginning "I find much of interest in your Column," he continues:

"I have known many expert marksmen—pistol, rifle and shotgun. It is true that most beginners shoot with one eye closed, and many experts also use that manner. But it is equally true that a large number of experts shoot with both eyes open, and nearly all trick or fancy shots do. An old-timer, who spent years as a guard on the Deadwood stage coach explained:

"'When I'm shooting, I need all the eyesight I've got' . . .

"If," Veritas resumes, "the right eye is dominant in a right-handed marksman, then he can keep both eyes open to advantage; but if the left eye is dominant, then the right-handed marksman probably closes his left eye and aims with the weaker right. It is a cinch that, when 'snap-shooting' from the hip, Annie Oakley kept both eyes open: I saw her do so."

All we may say to this is that the time is not long past when, shooting, we shut both windows of the soul. However, here follows a letter hinting at an entirely too shut-eyed policy.

"We Americans," writes Henry L. Stoner, "pride ourselves on our public school system—yet, today, not only every child, but every public-school educated man you meet, tells you that an embargo on oil will soon bring Italy to her knees before the Emperor of Ethiopia and the secretary general of the League of Nations.

"Of course, Italy wants us to remain ignorant of her natural resources. Doubtless she has managed to censor our school geographies. But, even if we are really an imperfectly educated nation, we certainly are a nation of delicatessen patrons. How can those of us who have eyes fail to know that our food stores are overstocked with oil produced in and exported from Italy?"

Dear Post-Impressionist: I don't see why The Washington Post gives first-page prominence to the discovery of the fact that Dan'l Boone once escaped arrest in Virginia.

B. COWAN COOPER.

Baltimore, Md., Dec. 8.

Lots of people have a better record than Boone's. There's an uncle of ours who has lived in Virginia for 45 years and, except during the prohibition era, escaped arrest throughout all of them.

Dear Sir: I have a Liberty bond that I want to get the Government to redeem, according to promises. At 2:05 p. m., on Wednesday of last week, I called, for this purpose, at the Division of Loans and Currency in the Treasury Building—and found its offices hermitically closed. A uniformed guard officially informed me the employes of the division work only between the hours of 9 and 2.

Can anybody explain this laxness?

A. GORDON HAMILTON.

We can explain it. We can and do explain it on the plausible hypothesis that there isn't enough currency left to justify longer hours.

The Brotherton Books.

The Brotherton collection, which has been presented to Leeds University, includes some of the rarest extant books in the field of English literature, extending, says the London Times, from Pynson's edition of Chaucer down to the twentieth century. First editions include Spenser's "Faerie Queen" and "Complaints;" a fine set of the Shakespeare folios, and a copy of the extremely rare 1640 edition of Shakespeare's poems. The first of the Shakespeare folios came from the library of Theodore N. Vail, of New York.

Fair Enough

Military Ribbons.

THERE is no more beautiful sight in this world than a European army officer of the rank of major and better permitting himself to be gazed upon and appreciated by lovely ladies in the lobby or bar of a stylish hotel.

Young lieutenants and captains are beautiful, too, but generally they have not not yet reached full bloom, so to speak. Their epaulets are just as pretty in pale blue, rose or yellow, edged with gold tape and fringe, and the stripes down the trousers or breeches are exactly the same as those which are worn by their superiors. But junior officers, save in exceptional cases, are too young to have accumulated bouquets of decorations and campaign ribbons which are the guarantee of a military man. A perfect specimen will have at least two and possibly four rows of medals arrayed on his chest. The effect is not unlike that of a color chart in the house paint department of an American hardware store. Each half-inch denotes some stirring exploit against savage Jimoolies of Jimooliland or some service of less strenuous character in the drawing room of an Embassy in a foreign country.

EUROPEAN officers have an advantage over Americans because the sun seldom sets on campaigns which are open to them, in which the odds are 1,000 to 1 in their favor. And, too, war departments of the Old World have an appreciation of the soul of a military officer. They recognize his love of pretty ribbons for his chest and make available to him a variety of noncombatant honors which, though unimportant when considered by themselves, nevertheless make for glory when strung together row on row.

In breaking down a row of ribbons into its component parts it might be discovered that some of them were only nominal dross. The pretty yellow one with purple stripes might have been awarded to a dashing officer merely because he didn't forget to wash his neck and polish his buttons for an entire semester when he was a cadet in a military academy a quarter of a century ago. The red one with diagonal white bars could be nothing more important than a souvenir badge given by a king to those who marched in his coronation parade. Another might mean that our hero, with great devotion and skill, successfully carried out a raid by a well-armed fighting squad and seized a village police station up in in the mountains 20 years back. The order of Ivan the Terrible may have been bestowed by the late King of a Balkan nation long since liquidated for faithful service in seducing an opposing general's girl friend and obtaining important military secrets.

WAR for liberty and justice! All wars are wars for liberty and justice. A decoration may drop out of the mail to remind an officer that a grateful sultan of a sandy patch somewhere east of Suez enjoyed his visit to his palace the time he passed through on a vacation cruise. They add up in time.

On a continent whose troops, away off in far places, are always burning down cluster grass huts somewhere and chasing natives up trees—with possibly the support of gunboats lying in the river—new medals are constantly being devised. So a man starting, at 18, with reasonable luck, ought to have a string of honors at least a foot long by the time he has reached the rank of major, with the right to wear brass on his hat. And in addition to all these opportunities the British offer their distinguished orders by special decree of his majesty the King, a proportion of which inevitably falls to any officer who arrives at the rank of colonel. They have their Order of the Garter, their Victorian Order, their Indian Orders and their Orders of the British Empire. It may be laid down as a general thing that an officer above the grade of major is incomplete without at least one.

IN conversation with Capt. Davey, assistant attache of the British Embassy in Rome, I discovered he had served at a military academy in Canada and had visited West Point with their hockey team. He, therefore, knew Maj. Phil Fleming, of the American Corps Engineers, now in charge of the Passamaquoddy job in Maine. Capt. Davey said that, even in brief acquaintance with Maj. Fleming, he had to realize that he was an uncommonly fine army officer. Yet Maj. Fleming had no initials behind his name, and he wears only a few ribbons.

If ribbons denote the ability and ferocity to perform patriotic services, American Army and Navy officers must be an inferior corps, as compared with their colleagues in Europe. A second lieutenant in a European army likely will wear more colors on his chest than 20 colonels—not necessarily grizzled—of American forces. And certainly a European major with no regalia behind his name and no more ribbons than Maj. Fleming would consider himself a tragic failure and go out and shoot himself.

Smile On The Tiger

Fourteenth Street Feline That Is New York's Tammany Exhibits No Cheshire Smirk Over Sudden Twist Of Fate.

By Ralph E. Renaud.
Special Correspondence of The Post.

New York.

WHEN I was a very small boy indeed, I possessed a picture book which briefly chronicled the adventures, among others, of a certain Mr. Perks. Perks, it appeared, was considerable of a fire-eater with a particular peeve against the Sons of the Prophet. His entire biography, as given in my book, was brief, simple, but shocking. It read:

Ponsonby Perks, he fought with the Turks,
And cut off their heads with smiles and smirks.

Unfortunately, however, the illustration which accompanied the text did not seem to bear out the suave and debonair characteristics of Ponsonby as given in the verse. He was shown as exceedingly fierce and not smiling or smirking at all. In fact, he was depicted in the act of wiping the gore from a ferocious cavalry saber, while beside him on the floor stood the turbaned heads of three Ottomans, neatly decapitated. The eerie part of it was that all three of the Turks displayed the most engaging smiles and smirks. This contradiction between text and picture left me in complete confusion as to whose smiles and smirks were referred to and on whose faces they actually belonged. I never did solve the mystery.

Recent developments in New York have provoked a somewhat similar confusion as to the famous smile on the face of the Tiger. Tammany wants to smile, but isn't quite sure that it ought to, with a resulting embarrassment somewhat unusual in the Wigwam. The Fusionists, whose heads are, metaphorically, rolling in the basket know that they shouldn't smile even by implication but a faint smirk of relief is apparent on their faces. It is all very much like Ponsonby Perks and his victims.

• • • •

THERE is the background of the situation. When LaGuardia and his Fusionists came into power in New York they were washed up by a bit of a tidal wave. The wave, however, did not break quite over the last ramparts of Tammany. The Tiger kept its districts attorneys, those necessary links with the underworld, and a sprinkling among the Board of Aldermen, but within a few months after LaGuardia became Mayor his Fusion-elected controller, Cunningham, died. By that time Tammany had recovered from its panic and rallied its forces. It managed to elect Taylor to the controllership and, through him, once more had its fingers on the purse strings.

Meanwhile another election has intervened. There was no city wide office at stake, but the tide was already overwhelmingly toward Tammany. LaGuardia had definitely and rather contemptuously tossed away the support of the Republicans whom he honored more in the breach than the observance—chiefly by a swift kick in that vicinity whenever the question of patronage came up.

Moreover, the Mayor had irrevocably aligned himself as a New Dealer, feeling that he must stand or fall with Roosevelt. His former background of socialism began to show through his self-sketched portrait of a statesman. And he developed a certain New Deal habit of losing his temper at the mildest breath of criticism. The electorate, apparently, liked none of these things and wrote their views on their ballots. After the vote was counted it looked as though Fusion and LaGuardia were saddled with all the responsibility of governing the city without being able to collect any of the approbation.

• • • •

THEN fate smiled once more on Tammany. Or did it? At any rate, the election was scarcely over before Bernard S. Deutsch, president of the board of aldermen, suddenly died. Deutsch was a Fusionist, LaGuardia's chief supporter, and rather an able citizen. Incidentally, he had three votes in the board of estimate, the upper chamber of the municipal legislature. Automatically these three votes went to Tammany, for Alderman Sullivan, a stanch Tammany supporter, fell heir to Mr. Deutsch's official chair. Thus Tammy, without any mandate from the people, suddenly found itself possessed of a somewhat unwelcome majority in the say-so of the city. What to do—what to do?

Tammany likes to make its appeal not on its record, which, by the necessities of practical politics, must always be rather spotted, but through the power of its organization in the well-disciplined lower ranks. And now all the chief decisions are up to Tammany, which doesn't want to make them.

For example, the whole knotty question of relief is dumped plump in Tammany's lap. Is the unpopular sales tax to be continued? Tammany will have to decide. Will more taxes have to be voted? Tammany must make the answer. Will the Mayor's pet plan for a municipal power plant be submitted to the people? The decision will be up to Tammany. The full responsibility for every large civic policy and undertaking will be deposited at the entrance of the Wigwam. But the power to execute will still remain in the hands of the Fusionists.

• • • •

AND it was exactly this embarrassing moment that Gov. Lehman chose to deal the Braves a blow which has left them giddy. In Brooklyn the last election was fought on the issue of the district attorneyship, an issue absolutely vital to Tammany. McGoldrick, the Fusion candidate, made a bludgeoning battle of it, charging a scandalous suppression of the Druckman murder case by the district attorney to protect a favored group of racketeers.

But Brooklyn didn't want reform and returned the incumbent, Geoghan, by a thumping plurality of 240,000. Nevertheless the odor of the Druckman case, involving police bribery and the usual Tammany alertness to shield politically important criminals, persisted. The Governor has just superseded District Attorney Geoghan in the conduct of the case, despite his triumphal indorsement by "the peepul." This leaves Tammany with discredited district attorneys in the two big boroughs, for in Manhattan the district attorney was already replaced by Special Prosecutor Dewey in the investigation of the intolerable rackets which have so festered as to leave New York the leading crime center of the continent.

Naturally, the smile on the face of the Tiger is somewhat twisted. Two unexpected deaths have given the organization more power in the control of the city than it ever expected. The voters, too, are swarming back to the old allegiance with gains all along the line for the kind of government from which New York can't seem to sober up. Everything ought to be jake. But it isn't.

• • • •

THE future, as far as Tammany is concerned, lies balanced on the razor edge of chance. One might almost say that bright as things look, they never appeared darker. It is true that the smile has largely disappeared from the features of Mr. Ponsonby Perks Fusion, who only a couple of years ago cut off the head of the Tiger. A certain bewildered smirk even shows on the jowls of the Fourteenth Street Feline, now that its head and body seem to be uniting once more. But, all in all, it is not the sort of smile which presages a good hearty laugh at the expense of its enemies.

Spectre Of Injustice

By Karl Schriftgiesser.

To Remind The Public.

SOME criticism has been directed at the daily press, I believe, because shortly after certain of the newspapers, impelled of course by purely humanitarian instincts, sought to aid poor Edith Maxwell, a youngster of the same hill country up and shot his poor old pappy to death. According to the illogical, had the newspapers minded their own business and let Wise County justice take its course this callow youngster would have thought twice before spraying his daddy with buckshot in the good old mountain-country way. These critics suggest he sort of felt that even if he were found guilty of murder the metropolitan press would come to his rescue, raise a defense fund, and perhaps get him a week at the Palace along with Borah Minovitch.

I doubt very much if any such connected thought flashed through his mind at the particular moment he put the old man in his place. The old man, or pappy, was engaged in beating the tar out of the lad at the time and the lad, moved by instinct, reached for his shotgun just as little Edith reached for the high-heeled boot. But even if, subconsciously, he was impelled to such drastic action by the vision of reporters and camera men flocking about him, it seems to me that the harm which he did has been pretty much negated by the essential good which the newspapers have done by getting soft-hearted about little Edith's plight.

PERSONALLY, I never could get too excited about Edith's imprisonment, there being so many more important cases of misjustice all about the country which seemed to me to carry much greater significance than the rather harsh sentence meted out to the pretty school ma'am. I would rather see the money and effort that is being spent upon Edith turned toward other sufferers, especially those like Angelo Herndon, who have felt the lash because they were impelled by a motive even more Christian than that of self-preservation. I mean, of course, a desire to save the lives of thousands of share-croppers and other misfortunates, even if the desire for social justice did lead them to espouse the wrong political cause.

But this is beside the point I want to make. And this is, that in the wake of the Edith Maxwell case there has come a flood of genuine Golden Rulism. In those original Institutes of Public Opinion, the letters to the editor columns, I have been noticing an avalanche of protest not only against the maltreatment of Edith, but against the sadism directed at other victims of civilization, or the system, or just plain life itself. The other day someone wanted a Baltimore paper to go to bat for a 16-year-old boy awaiting death in the electric chair for his participation, with an older companion, in a hold-up that led to murder. The writer believed that perhaps this youngster might be rehabilitated or something and made into a useful citizen, just as they hope Edith will become after she gets out of jail.

AND only this morning a rather pretty gal came into my office with a prayer on her lips and money in her purse, both of which she wanted sent to a mother whose husband had hanged himself in jail because his family was starving. This charming debutante was sure that this sad case was just as deserving of aid as Edith's was. She admitted that she was impelled to visit the newspaper office because of the fanfare over the gal with the high-heeled shoe. It struck me then that the Edith Maxwell defense fund was doing some good in unexpected ways, that it was stirring up an attitude toward the unfortunate not wholly directed by a desire just to help the unfortunate.

There is, it seems, a growing hatred for injustice, whether brought upon a person by his political beliefs, as in the case of Angelo Herndon, or by his victimization by society, as in the cases of the starving mother and the boy holdup man. Or, I might add, by the raising of the feeling of "reasonable doubt" in the minds of the citizenry, as in the case of Bruno Hauptmann. All of this, of course, has not been brought about by the journalistic fervor in behalf of poor Edith, but her case has done much towards awakening this feeling.

UNFORTUNATELY, this sense of hatred for injustice is not yet as widespread as the hatred for justice, as is evidenced by the statements of some of our citizens. Just the other day, for example, an attorney of high standing arose at a meeting and in ringing tones advocated the anarchical disposition of certain persons whom he appeared not to like. He suggested that all reds be loaded in scows, towed out beyond the 12-mile limit, and blown to shreds. I gathered from the accounts that his listeners were heartily in accord with him. As a former Army officer he should have known better than to have advocated this wholly illegal method of annihilation, and as a lawyer he should, of course, be debarred on the grounds that if his method were followed there would be little left for his professional brethren to do.

The vicious we shall always have with us, ready to fill the jails with their enemies. Once in awhile, however, a fundamentally unimportant episode, such as the jailing of Edith, is brought to the public attention through the kind-hearted newspapers and made the means of directing our thoughts toward the ever-present specter of injustice. And a minority sees through the actualities of the case in question to the causes, in however fumbling a way. This, I think, is far more important than the remote possibility that the mountain lad popped off his daddy because he thought he, too, might receive journalistic sympathy and a defense fund.

Zamora Opens Talks to Form 15th Cabinet

Deadlock on Tax Plan Causes Fall; Views on Course Differ.

By the Associated Press.

Madrid, Dec. 9.—For the fifteenth time since the inauguration of the Spanish Republic in 1931, President Niceto Alcala Zamora opened consultations tonight with political leaders in an effort to form a stable government.

The fourteenth cabinet collapsed following a deadlock in the Chamber of Deputies over Premier Joaquin Chapaprieta's financial and economic policies, particularly his proposal to increase revenues by the imposition of heavy inheritance taxes.

Chapaprieta's economy reforms, however, were finally forced through Congress. It appeared probable, nevertheless, that much of his work in attempting to balance the budget for the first time in the republic's history might be undone before a new cabinet could be formed.

Views Divergent.

The first two political leaders called into conference by President Alcala Zamora expressed widely divergent views on formation of a new government.

Santiago Alba, Liberal leader, advocated organization of a coalition government along the lines of the past one, and warned the President to "avoid dissolution of the Cortes (Congress) at any cost.

Julian Besteiro, prominent Socialist, advised Alcala Zamora to "dissolve the Cortes immediately and form a government excluding all those of the last cabinet"

Seeks to Hold Cortes.

Well-informed persons reported it was rumored that the President was ready to go to any extreme to prevent dissolution of the Cortes, as he considered revision of the electoral law and passage of the budget "vitally necessary."

Chapaprieta formed a government September 25, and revised it October 29, when two ministers whose names had been drawn into a gambling scandal—Alejandro Lerroux and Juan Jose Rocha—were removed.

Benefit Costume Ball.

A costume ball to assist the needy naturalized citizens among their number will be held tonight by members of the Americanization School Association at the Elks Club, 919 H street northwest, from 9 p. m. to midnight. Prizes will be given for the best costumes, and admission money will go into a Christmas fund.

Bombs Feared In Addis Ababa; Natives Dig In Airplane Over Ethiopian Capital Believed Advance Guard of Raiders.

By the Associated Press.

Addis Ababa, Dec. 9.—Many residents of Addis Ababa hastily began digging trenches today, fearing Italian fliers would follow up their bombings of Dessye with an attack on this city.

A strange airplane seen by some residents flying high over the capital resulted in reports that the Italians were surveying the situation here. The government tried to identify the plane, but failed.

Some residents said the Italian radio station at Asmara, Eritrea, had broadcast a report Addis Ababa would be attacked.

Government sources said four Italian planes flew over Dessye again today, but dropped no bombs. Dessye, field headquarters of Emperor Haile Selassie, was bombed Friday and Saturday and an encampment north of there was bombed yesterday.

Belgian Officers Quit.

All Belgian officers serving in the Ethiopian army submitted their resignations today. There has been a clash of views between these military advisers and high Ethiopian officials.

The Belgians threatened to leave unless the difficulty is ironed out. The nature of the disagreement was not disclosed.

Officials of the Seventh Day Adventist Church, who reported their hospital in Dessye was bombed during the first air attack, said today Italy has long known that the hospital was American property.

(The Italian Embassy in London, on behalf of its government, issued a formal denial that an American hospital had been bombed in Dessye.)

Hundreds Reported Slain.

Mogadiscio, Italian Somaliland, Dec. 7 (Delayed) (AP).—Hundreds of Ethiopians were reported today to have been killed in an Italian air attack on troops of Ras Desta Demtu, son-in-law of Emperor Haile Selassie.

A squadron, a high official source disclosed, flew from Dolo to Juba to drop 70-pound bombs on the warriors Thursday. Ethiopians returned the fire and one Italian observer was killed.

Italian fliers and tanks are making raids ahead of their troops from Gorrahei. More supplies are being taken there by caravan across the waterless plains.

S. S. Majestic Slated To Be Retired, Junked

London, Dec. 9 (AP).—Shipping circles heard today that the 14-year-old S. S. Majestic would soon be withdrawn from the Atlantic service and be broken up for scrap iron. Officers of the Cunard-White Star Line declined to comment on the report, although they admitted that the Majestic does not appear on the sailing schedule after February 13 of next year.

The Mauretania and Olympic already have been ordered to the ship breakers to be replaced by the new British supership, the S. S. Queen Mary.

New U. S. Ship Gear Smashed; Sabotage Seen

Plot Charged in Wrecking of $12,000,000 Quincy Propeller Shaft.

By the Associated Press.

Quincy, Mass., Dec. 9.—Serious damage to reduction gears connecting turbines of the new U. S. cruiser Quincy with the propellor shaft was reported today by Harry E. D. Gould, general manager of the Fore River Shipyards.

Asked if the damage had resulted from sabotage, Gould said an investigation of the matter was in progress.

Saturday's accident was the second serious mishap to delay work on the 578-foot 10,000-ton cruiser. Last August, fire swept the main cable room of the vessel soon after it was launched, causing damage to wiring and electrical equipment estimated by Fore River Shipbuilding Corporation officials at $100,000.

Must Be Replaced.

When questioned about the damage to the propelling mechanism today, General Manager Gould issued the following statement:

"Before having a dock trial on a ship, it is customary to have a preliminary operating run of the main propelling units before the final coupling up of the units to the propeller shaft.

"On Saturday this operation was carried out on the U. S. S. Quincy.

"In the after engine room and during the run, the gears showed signs of being damaged and will require replacement.

"It will take a few days to replace the damaged parts."

An emergency crew of 90 mechanics was pressed into service today to remove the damaged machinery and replace it.

"Deliberately Wrecked."

Boston, Dec. 9 (AP).—The Boston Evening American says the sabotage which allegedly ruined the turbine reducing gears of the new United States cruiser Quincy consisted of the deliberate placing of a loose steel nut in such a position that vibration caused by starting of the electrical machinery dropping it into the revolving mechanism.

The American says shipyard and Navy officers decided to make a first test of the reducing gears of the 90 per cent completed cruiser on Saturday.

No Report to Navy.

By the Associated Press.

The Navy Department said yesterday it had received no reports concerning alleged sabotage of the turbine reducing gears of the new cruiser Quincy, now under construction at Quincy, Mass.

Freedom Held To Vindicate U. S., Filipinos

globe probably uninteresting even to the leading American strategists, can be gleaned from the official records. It was simply a part of American strategy to cripple Spain wherever possible, and Dewey's assignment was to dispose of the Spanish fleet in the Orient.

Precisely because of the known lack of American imperialistic intentions, the Filipinos under Gen. Emilio Aguinaldo believed that America's interest in the Philippines was a passing one. To Aguinaldo, especially, Dewey's coming appeared providential. He believed that the American forces would be glad to help him dispose of the remnants of Spanish authority in the Philippines, attend the inauguration of his republic in much the same fashion that a formidable congressional delegation has been attending the recent inauguration of the Commonwealth, then bow themselves out and rush to the help of other oppressed peoples. The belief was tempting, the American consular representatives in Hongkong and Shanghai encouraged it, and so Aguinaldo not only held unto it himself but he proclaimed it as the gospel truth to the 7,000,000 Filipinos.

Misunderstood Method.

It is now plain that Aguinaldo rightly understood the American intention but sadly misunderstood the American method. He expected America to do in a month what it has taken her 37 years to accomplish.

President McKinley, indeed, was not unaware of the Filipino expectation. He could not easily decide whether to leave the Filipinos to themselves immediately and perhaps leave them a prey to other powers, or to help them along for a while until they could better take care of themselves. But Aguinaldo, having succeeded in practically defeating the Spaniards without outside help, was full of self-confidence. He wanted to be let alone immediately.

Then one of the great paradoxes of history occured. While McKinley, night after night in the White House, was praying on his knees for Divine guidance with respect to the disposition of the Philippines, Aguinaldo, impatient and believing bad faith, started his insurrection. McKinley decided to hold the Philippines, the Treaty of Paris was negotiated and signed, $20,000,000 was paid to Spain, and the American forces started in earnest to subjugate the Filipinos.

This money, together with $3,000,000 appropriated by Congress for rehabilitation immediately after the insurrection, was to be the only direct appropriation ever made by Congress for the islands. Except for the expenses of maintaining the Philippine department of the U. S. Army and of two naval bases, one in Olongapo and the other in Cavite, America worked out its Philippine program entirely with Philippine money.

In general, the American policy for the Philippines has been threefold. First has been the educational program, which sought to give the Filipinos a common language and a literacy that would justify some measure of self-government. Second has been the political program having for objective—in the words of McKinley's instruction to William Howard Taft, who ended the military government of Gen. MacArthur, the establishment of a government "designed not for our satisfaction or for the expression of our theoretical views, but for the happiness, peace and prosperity of the people of the Philippine Islands • • • " And third has been the economic program directed upon creating a profitable market for American manufactures and on bringing prosperity to the Filipinos.

Mass Schooling Success.

In both the educational and political fields, America has adopted the policy of giving way to the Filipinos as soon as they demonstrated ability to assume the next higher position.

Anglo-Saxon mass education has justified itself in the Philippines. English today is more widely spoken and written in the islands than any other language, not barring Spanish, which had had 400 years' start, and the dialects. Along with Spanish, it is the official language; and in it are published the most important literary works and the most widely-circulated magazines and newspapers.

The political progress of the Filipinos has been equally rapid. McKinley's instructions to the Taft commission, drafted by Elihu Root, were in effect the Philippines' first organic act. It provided for municipal autonomy, decreed elevation of the Filipinos to the higher posts as soon as they are fit for them, and transplanted the American Bill of Rights in the islands. The bill of 1902, often called the Cooper act after the late Congressman Henry Allen Cooper, of Wisconsin, superseded the instructions, established provincial autonomy, and set up in 1907 the first assembly of elective members, who were naturally Filipinos, as the lower house of the national legislature.

When Woodrow Wilson, a political scientist by training, got to the White House, things began to move much faster. He sent Francis Burton Harrison to Manila as the new governor general and Harrison immediately began supplanting Americans with Filipinos in the high offices in the government. The upper house of the legislature, whose members were appointive, he immediately handed over to a majority of Filipinos. Then, the Jones act was passed converting the upper chamber into an elective senate, henceforth to be composed exclusively of Filipinos. Not content with giving the entire legislative department to the Filipinos, the Washington Administration also delivered the courts, except a majority of one in the Supreme Court, to the natives. On top of this, Harrison created two extra legal bodies through which he gave a liberal share of the executive power to the presiding officers of the legislature. His cabinet, except the vice governor, who had the public instruction portfolio, was entirely Filipino.

Although somewhat more vague, the economic program has been no less effective. Spain was given by the Treaty of Paris ten years within which to readjust her Philippine economic interests, but this concession was almost immediately nullified in practice, since American goods were openly favored in the tariff classifications. When the ten-year grace ended the Philippine market was declared open to American goods. In return and perhaps as an honest attempt to help the Filipinos prosper, Philippine goods were placed on duty-free quotas on the American market. When the Democrats came to power in 1912 one of their first acts was to declare complete free trade between the United States and the Philippines.

The establishment of the Commonwealth, on the one hand, proves the unselfishness of the American intention which the Filipinos often doubted in the past. On the other hand, it serves as a recognition of the natives' claim of capacity for self-government. The American subjugation of the Philippines, now it can be told, had created suspicion of bad faith in Filipino minds. With all the American explanations and promises of ultimate freedom, the natives could not fully believe that America would ever withdraw from the islands. The independence law, now operative under the Commonwealth, is a vindication of American good faith and altruism. Further than this, it completes the meaning of the new interpretation given by McKinley to the American doctrine of government by consent of the governed. America has governed the Filipinos by force until such time as they can truly govern themselves.

Roosevelt Asks World Peace; Hits Farm Foes

tion. He responded with a promise to keep the light of religious toleration burning in this country and prayer that religious freedom might be enjoyed in every nation.

Critics Rebuked.

But most significant, Cardinal Mundelein, in presenting the President, indirectly rebuked those who have asserted the Catholic Church disapproves of the Administration's Mexican policy and heaped such obviously warm-hearted praise on Mr. Roosevelt for his "indomitable courage" and his sense of social justice that the latter confessed to "choking-up."

So enthusiastically and warmly did this great Catholic educational institution receive the President that he lingered an hour beyond the scheduled time for his train departure. But he did not mind and when Toledo, Ohio, was reached tonight he gladly came to the rear platform of his train to greet approximately 3,000 persons who came down to the station to see him pass by. He reminded them of how the New Deal had helped reopen their bank.

Amid howls of delight from his Farm Bureau audience of 14,000, the President said opposition to his farm program comes chiefly from "a few who profited heavily from the depression."

He added that "it is they and their henchmen who are doing the best to foment city people against the farmers and the farm program." But he expressed confidence that "the great masses of city people are fair-minded" and applaud the justice of their Government seeking to prevent exploitation of the farmers.

Assails Treaty Foes.

In a militant, fighting passage of what was otherwise a purely defensive speech the President continued by assailing critics of the Canadian reciprocal trade pact as "dispensers of discord" and "calamity howlers" seeking to persuade the farmers they had been victimized by the Government.

He denied that agriculture had been "crucified" by the agreement, but asserted that if the farmers were injured by it, "you have every assurance that Canada and the United States will join in correcting inequalities"—and extemporaneously he added—"as good neighbors will do." This brought the loudest cheering of the meeting, aside from the ovations given Mr. Roosevelt on his arrival and departure.

The President defended the rise in food prices as justice due to the farmers, but he warned them that they must have consideration for the consumer. He conceded that food prices "in many cases were too high" but this he blamed by inference on middle men.

Mr. Roosevelt did not directly recognize that two hours after he spoke the Supreme Court started to hear arguments on the fate of the AAA processing taxes, nor did he indicate what alternatives he had in mind should that tribunal declare unconstitutional this farm measure.

The closest he came to a recognition to that event was when he said that the "organized power" of the Nation had been mobilized to end the "rule of tooth and claw" in agriculture.

"I say 'the organized power of the Nation' advisedly," the President continued, "because you and I as Americans who still believe in our Republican form of Constitutional government, know, as a simple fact, that 48 separate sovereign States, acting each one as a separate unit, never were able and never will be able to legislate or to administer individual laws adequately to balance the agricultural life of a nation so greatly dependent on nationally grown crops of many kinds."

Two Interdependent.

Throughout the President's speech there ran as a thread the contention that agriculture and industry were interdependent and that it was justice to rehabilitate both together, a thought he elaborated on in his talk at the Kelly luncheon. He undertook to show the results in industry accruing from increased farm purchasing power.

When the President finished speaking, Edward A. O'Neal, president of the Farm Federation, presented him the organization's "distinguished service award for 1935"—a gold medal, awarded to the person doing more than any other for agriculture, which when pinned on his coat lapel, he wore for the remainder of the day.

Seated on the platform during the President's address were Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, Postmaster General Farley, Gov. Horner, Mayor Kelly, Frank C. Walker, director of the NEC, and Forbes Morgan and Walter Cummings, secretary and treasurer of the Democratic national committee and lesser Democratic leaders.

Remarks Pointed.

The President in the presence of leading figures of the Catholic Church at Notre Dame, pledged himself to use every "means legitimately" within his power and office "to increase that light that its rays may extend the farther, that its glory may be seen even from afar."

Undoubtedly the President intended his remarks to apply to religious persecution in Mexico, Germany and elsewhere, but he mentioned no specific instances and made it clear that he could go no further than to raise his voice in behalf of religious toleration.

But the demonstration of faith and loyalty—even deep affection—given to the President by the Catholic audience indicated he did not need say more on the subject of religious persecution. Indeed, the significance of the Notre Dame convocation was not what the President said, but what was said by others.

So pointed were Cardinal Mundelein's remarks that some observers believed he was indirectly rebuking Martin H. Carmody, supreme knight of the Knights of Columbus; the Baltimore Catholic Review and other Catholic critics of the President's policy in regard to religious difficulties in Mexico.

At all events, henceforth whenever a Catholic voice is raised against the President, all he or his friends need do is to point to the address which Cardinal Mundelein made here today.

Father John F. O'Hara, president of Notre Dame University, in opening the convocation, likewise heaped praise on President Roosevelt, adding that "to the respectful esteem which is your due as our Chief Executive, we add the affection that is born of admiration for the courage with which you took charge of this country in the darkest hour it has known since the Civil War."

And, finally, the citation awarding the President the degree of doctor of laws, which described Mr. Roosevelt as "a leader and ruler who, with faith and invincible courage when other brave men were faltering, took the reins of government at a crisis which threatened with collapse and chaos the centuried civilization and institutions of our country and the rest of the world, and who is now, by achievement even more than by official position, the first citizen of our Republic."

All this took place in the presence of seven Catholic bishops from various parts of the country; numerous monsignori and priests; Govs. Henry Horner of Illinois, and Paul V. McNutt of Indiana, Mayor Edward J. Kelly of Chicago; a dozen Middle West college and university presidents and hundreds of officials and political leaders of Indiana, Illinois and Michigan.

The President shared Notre Dame's honors of the day with Carlos P. Romulo, Philippine journalist and leader in the independence movement, who also received a degree of doctor of laws. The special convocation at which these degrees were conferred was in honor of the commonwealth of the Philippines.

After the Presidential special roared into South Bend, between lines of cheering people banked from curbs to buildings in the downtown section, the President, with Cardinal Mundelein, rode slowly the 3 miles to the university grounds.

In the gaily decorated university gymnasium, 7,000 persons, alumni, members of the faculty and the student body and others waited the President.

The President, in cap and gown with the tassels of a Doctor of Laws, entered the hall on the arm of his military aide, Col. Edwin M. Watson, in full-dress uniform. Beside them was Cardinal Mundelein and Father John F. O'Hara, president of the university.

Father O'Hara, opening the convocation, explained that it was called to honor the new Commonwealth of the Philippines and added that "if it be not unique, it is at least remarkable for a nation to take the final step to sovereignty without blood-shed," and for that President Roosevelt had to be thanked, he said.

Cardinal Mundelein, in presenting the President asserted "we are not in politics, neither the church nor I" and went on to add "that no individual cardinal, bishop or priest, no organization of laymen nor Catholic newspaper has the right to speak for 20,000,000 Catholics in this country on matters of politics." Only the Catholic hierarchy can do that and it has not done so.

The Catholic prelate paid tribute to the President, asserting he had learned to "admire in him, more than anything else, his indomitable fighting courage," courage in face of a physical disability and courage that "enabled him to bring order and renewed confidence out of chaos at the very beginning of his Administration; courage that caused him to set aside the traditions of his class, the friendships of his youth, the pressure of the money power, to come to the aid of the forgotten man in the more equal distribution of wealth."

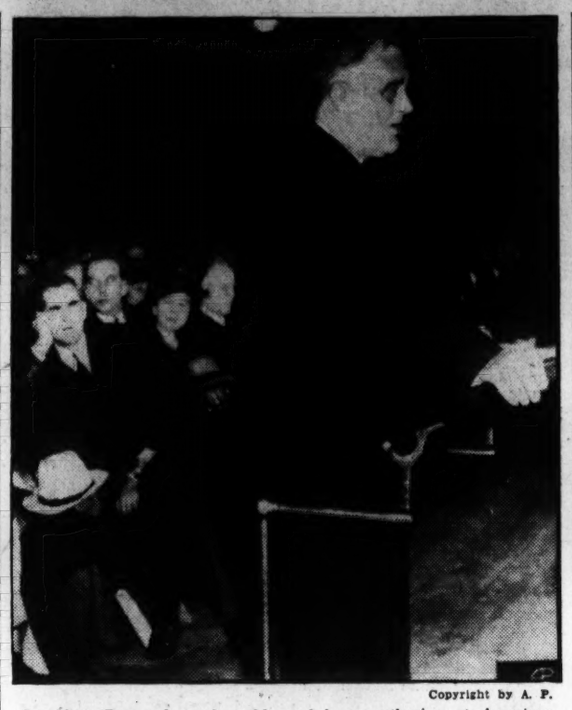
"We who know," Cardinal Mundelein continued, "how the poor must live, we whose duty it is to lighten their burdens and help solve their problems as much as we can, we have long since felt that the swollen fortunes of yesterday and today must soon be a thing of the past, that the burden of taxation must soon be shifted to be more equally borne by those who have the inherited wealth and plentiful income to enable them to do so."

"I can only repeat again in public what I said to the President in private when he spoke of his purpose to levy a more equitable tax on great wealth and large incomes, as he has, it is something that should have been done long ago, but oh, it will take a lot of courage to do so, and to carry it through."

Text of Roosevelt Address to the American Farm Bureau Federation

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Dec. 9.—The text of the address delivered here today by President Roosevelt before the American Farm Bureau Federation follows:



Copyright by A. P.

President Roosevelt as he addressed huge gathering at American Farm Bureau Federation convention in Chicago yesterday. Secretary of Agriculture Wallace is seen, extreme left, taking in speech. President said New Deal farm program had given consumers "net benefits," cracked down on "calamity howlers."

Three years ago in addressing the farmers of the Nation, I reminded them that the economic life of the United States is a seamless web. This was a means of illustrating the great dependence of each economic unit in the Nation upon every other unit. Farm prosperity cannot exist without city prosperity, and city prosperity cannot exist without farm prosperity. It is therefore especially appropriate for you, as representatives of the farmers of the Nation, to meet here in this great metropolis of the Middle West—here in Chicago where the interests of agriculture are interwoven with the interests of other industries serving the Nation's needs. Here is a common meeting ground of agriculture, transportation, industry and labor.

Only a few generations ago interdependence between agriculture and industry was not in any way as great as it is today; but now your welfare depends in part on what you in the country do and in large part on what people do in the cities as well.

Your own experience of three and four years ago doubtless brings all of this vividly to your minds. Your sufferings — those sufferings of rural America were not because you were not producing—for your granaries and storehouses were bursting with the products of your labor—but because things in city and country both got out of balance and purchasing power had declined to the point where people in the cities did not have the money to buy farm produce and people on the farms did not have the money to buy city products.

Problem Many-Sided.

Two things were at that time especially clear. First, that because of almost unbelievable low prices for farm products, the growers of these products could not meet their indebtedness, could not pay their taxes, and could not meet the living expenses of their families. The other fact that in most major crops a constantly accumulating surplus had reached such absurdly high levels that crop price levels could not possibly rise until something was done to cut down to a reasonable level the bulging surplus which overhung the market.

For these reasons the recovery program that this Administration proposed and that Congress enacted was a many-sided one. The Administration and the Congress that took office in March, 1933, recognized that the emergency they faced then came from many causes and endangered the life of many groups. Consequently, it put the power of Government behind not only railroads and banks, but the industrial workers of the Nation, the farmers, the small home owners, the unemployed, and the young people who suffered from utter lack of opportunity. It was a great emergeny and it required swift action. Mistakes were inevitable because it was a new field.

It was inevitable too that time had to elapse before results were fully felt. When the many cells of our economic life were dying for lack of the blood of purchasing power, it took time, after fear had begun to subside, for new, vital purchasing power to be diffused once more. But that life is coming back—buoyant, happy life—we need no evidence beyond what we see and hear around us.

Agriculture Is Base.

Justice and old-fashioned common sense demanded that in the building of purchasing power we had to start with agriculture. I knew enough of the problems of the men and women who were partners with the soil to realize the depth of their suffering and the extent of their need back there in 1932 and early 1933. I knew the pangs of fear and moments of rejoicing that come to the farmer as the harvest frowns of smiles. And I realize the almost equally crushing sense of futility that comes to a farmer when, after months of toiling from morning to night, he reaps a bumper crop, only to see the price fall so low that it scarcely pays him to take this crop to market.

One of the greatest curses of American life has been speculation. I do not refer to the obvious speculation in stocks and bonds and land booms. You and I know that it is not inherently a good thing for individuals in any nation to be able to make great fortunes by playing the market without the necessity of using much in the way either of toil or of brains. Their tools are a little capital and a good deal of luck.

The kind of speculation I am talking about is the involuntary speculation of the farmer when he puts his crops into the ground. How can it be healthy for a country to have the price of crops vary 300 and 500 and 700 per cent, all in less than a generation? If you invest your savings or your capital in what you consider a wholly safe investment, which will conserve your principal so that you will still have that principal intact after ten years or twenty years or thirty years, you are naturally aghast if the value of that investment drops 50 per cent. Equally, when you make the investment you do not expect the principal suddenly to increase 50 per cent in value.

Food Speculation.

And yet, we have shrugged our shoulders when we have seen cotton run up and down the scale between 4½ cents and 28 cents, wheat run down and up the scale between $1.50 and 30 cents—corn, hogs, cattle, potatoes, rye, peaches—all of them fluctuating from month to month and from year to year in mad gyrations, which, of necessity, have left the growers of them speculators against their will.

The measures to which we turned to stop the decline and rout of American agriculture originated in the aspirations of the farmers themselves expressed through the several farm organizations. I turned to these organizations and took their counsel and sought to help them to get these purposes embodied in the law of the land. What you wanted and what you and I have endeavored to achieve was to put an end to the destructive forces that were threatening American agriculture. We sought to stop the rule of tooth and claw that threw farmers into bankruptcy or turned them virtually into serfs, forced them to let their buildings, fences and machinery deteriorate, made them rob their soil of its God-given fertility, deprived their sons and daughters of a decent opportunity on the farm. To those days, I trust, the organized power of the Nation has put an end forever.

Federal Action Needed.

I say "the organized power of the Nation" advisedly, because you and I as Americans who still believe in our republican form of constitutional Government know, as a simple fact, that 48 separate sovereign States, acting each one as a separate unit, never were able and never will be able to legislate or to administer individual laws adequately to balance the agricultural life of a nation so greatly dependent on nationally grown crops of many kinds.

As a first step organized agriculture pointed out that it was necessary to bring agriculture into a fair degree of equality with other parts of our economic life. For so long as agriculture remained a dead weight on economic life, sooner or later the entire structure would crash. We used for temporary guidance the idea of parity between farm prices and industrial prices. As you know, the figures that we used to determine the degree to which agricultural prices had fallen in relation to other prices were based upon the figures of 1909 to 1914. This was a fairly satisfactory way of measuring our reports. Those five years preceding the beginning of the World War were years of fair prosperity in this country. They were the last years before the widespread disturbance caused by the World War took place in our economic life. And measured by the figures built upon this standard, the relative purchasing power of the farmer had fallen to less than 50 per cent of normal in early 1933. I promised to do what I could to remedy this, and without burdening you with unnecessary figures, let the records say that a relative purchasing power of below 50 per cent has now moved up today to better than 90 per cent. As I have pointed out before, this rise in farm prices has meant a very substantial improvement in the farm income of the United States. The best available figures show that it has increased nearly $3,000,000,000 in the past two and one-half years.

Other Industries Benefit.

This buying power has been felt in many lines of business. Outstanding among these is the farm equipment industry, in which employment jumped from 27 per cent of the average in October, 1932, to 116 per cent in October, 1935. In the motorcar industry, which has found some of its best markets on farms and in small towns, over the same three-year span, employment has increased from 42 per cent to 105 per cent. These simple figures show how industrial employment in the cities has been benefited by the improvement in the farmers' condition.

Increasing pay rolls in the farm equipment and automobile industries in turn are stimulating other lines. Only a few days ago I noted an item in the papers which I thought very significant. It told of increasing activity in the textile mills. One reason, said the newspaper account, was the demand for textiles in the manufacture of automobiles. There you have the complete chain. The cotton-growing South, with more money to spend, buys new automobiles. The automobile makers buy more cotton goods from manufacturers in the Northeast, and these manufacturers in turn go into the market for more cotton. Goods are moving again, and as goods are moving, so is money moving once more, and as it flows millions of farm and city families are getting a bigger share of the national income.

Consumers Helped.

I think it is safe to say that although prices for farm products show many increases over depression lows, the farm program instead of burdening consumers as a group has actually given them net benefits. There are individuals whose incomes have not risen in proportion to the rise in certain food prices but at the same time the total net income of city dwellers is several billion dollars higher than in 1932, and I think you will agree with me that bargain prices for food in 1932 were little consolation to people in cities with no income whatsoever.

Though food prices in the cities are not on the average as high as they were, for example, in 1929, yet they are in many cases too high. It is difficult to explain why in many cases if the farmer gets an increase for his food crop over what he got three years ago, the consumer in the city had to pay two and three and four times the amount of that increase. Lifting prices on the farm up to the level where the farmer and his family can live is opposed chiefly by the few who profited heavily from the depression. It is they and their henchmen who are doing their best to foment city people against the farmers and the farm program. It is that type of political profiteer who seeks to discredit the vote in favor of a continued corn-hog program by comparing your desire for a fair price for the farmer to the appetite of hogs for corn.

Yet I know that the great masses of city people are fair-minded. They, like yourselves, suffered deeply from the depression, and I believe with all my heart that millions of these city people, struggling back towards better days, resent the attempts of political advantage seekers and profiteers to heap ridicule upon the recovery efforts that all of us are making.

Treaty Aids Farmers.

Some of the same type of individuals and groups are also trying to stir up farmers against other phases of the broad recovery program. Dispensers of discord are saying that farmers have ben victimized by the new reciprocal trade agreement with Canada and are painting pictures of a great flood of imports of farm products rushing across the border. Just as I am confident that the great masses of city people are fair-minded, so I am sure that the great majority of American farmers will be fair in their judgment of the new trade agreement. If the calamity howlers should happen to be right you have every assurance that Canada and the United States will join in correcting inequalities, but I do not believe for a single moment that the calamity howlers are right.

Ariculture, far from being crucified by this agreement, as some have told you, actually gains from it. We export more agricultural products to Canada than we have imported from her. We shall continue to do so, for the very simple reason that the United States with its larger area of agricultural land, its more varied climate and its vastly greater population, produces far more of most agricultural products, including animal products, vegetables and fruits, than does Canada. In the case of the few reductions that have been made, quota limitations are set on the amount that may be brought in at the lower rates.

Buying Power Increased.

On the other side of the picture we believe, and most unbiased men believe, that the general increase in our trade with Canada, including the exports of our factories, will so add to the purchasing power of hundreds of thousands of wage earners that they will be able to spend far more than they do today for the products of our own farms, our own forests and our own fisheries. Greater trade is merely another word for more production and more employment. The proof of this particular pudding is in the eating; the best way to judge the new accord is to observe how it works out. Analyze and remember the source and the motives of the objections. Remember too the old saying "it all depends on whose baby has the measles."

But the success that has attended and is attending our efforts to stem the depression and set the tide running the other way cannot blind us to the necessity of looking ahead to the permanent measures which are necessary to a more stable economic life. We are regaining a more fair balance among the groups that constitute the Nation and we must look to the factors that will make that balance stable.

The thing we all are seeking is justice in the common sense interpretation of that word—the interpretation that means "do unto your neighbor as you would be done by."

We Have Made Progress.

That interpretation means justice against exploitation on the part of those who do not care much for the lives, the happiness and the prosperity of their neighbors. The Nation applauds the efforts of its agencies of Government to deal swiftly with kidnapers, gangsters and racketeers. That is justice. The Nation applauds the efforts of its agencies of Government to save innocent victims from wildcat banking, from watered stocks, and from all other kinds of "confidence games." That is justice. The Nation applauds the efforts of Government to obtain and to maintain fair rewards for labor, whether it be the labor of the farmer or the labor of the factory worker or the labor of the white collar man. That is justice. The Nation applauds efforts, through the agencies of Government, to give a greater social security to the aged and to the unemployed, to improve health, and to create better opportunities for our young people. That, too, is justice.

In this quest for justice we have made progress. It is a lasting progress because the people of the Nation have learned more about effective cooperation in the past two and a half years than in the previous 25 years. We understand more than ever before what that term "the seamless web" means. We seek to balance agriculture and we have made great strides. But in balancing agriculture we know that it must be in balance not alone with itself, but with industry and business as well—that the producing public must give consideration to the consuming public.

Year by year as we go on many details, many problems will need to be analyzed and solved. Agriculture and industry and business are in overwhelming majorities cooperating for a common justice as never before.

In these present days we have seen and are seeing, not a rebirth of material prosperity alone; of greater significance to our national future is that spiritual reawakening, that deeper understanding that has come to our land. We who strive to dispel the bitterness and the littleness of the few who still think and talk in terms of the old and utter selfishness, we are working towards the destruction of sectionalism, of class antagonism and of malice. We who strive for cooperation among all parts of our great population in every part of the Nation, we intend to win through to a better day. We strive for America, and if we shall succeed, as by God's help we will, America will point towards a better world.

Roosevelt Talk Comment Split On Party Lines

Republicans Score Attitude on Treaty; Democrats, Farmers Favorable.

By the Associated Press.

Reaction to President Roosevelt's farm speech in Chicago yesterday was divided along political lines, with Republicans assailing his Canadian treaty attitude and Democrats praising the AAA.

"It is unfortunate," said Senator Steiwer (Republican), Oregon, "that the President regards American criticism of obvious defects in the recent Canadian treaty as 'dispensers of discord' and 'calamity howlers.'

"This unfriendly attitude is brightened by the faint assurance that Canada and the United States will join in correcting inequalities, the existence of which the President doubts."

Senator McGill (Democrat), Kansas, said both parties had pledged economic equality for agriculture with industry.

"Economic Equality."

"By the AAA," he said, "it was intended to restore this economic equality, and by virtue of its enforcement this equality is gradually but surely being restored.

"The restoration of a prosperous agriculture is the outstanding accomplishment of the Roosevelt Administration."

Senator McNary, of Oregon, the Republican leader, expressed "regret that the President did not touch upon a permanent agricultural policy, as this is the all-important phase of the subject."

He declared, however, the President's promise to correct inequalities in the Canadian treaty was "reassuring because there are noticeably a number of inequalities which should appeal to the President for action."

Senator Black, Democrat), Alabama, said the speech indicated the President "intends to move forward in his farm program in order not only to benefit the farmers, but all business."

"The farmers know," he added, "they have been immeasurably benefited and business knows it has benefited. Only a few of the so-called spokesmen for big business, whose income largely depends on the noise they make, dare to assert that business on the whole has not been benefited.

Farmers Favorable.

Chicago, Dec. 9 (AP).—"Dirt farmers" attending the American Farm Bureau Federation convention commented generally favorably on President Roosevelt's address today.

E. G. Setzger, owner of a 1,200-acre cotton farm near Uniontown, Ala., said:

"The point of his speech that appealed to me most was his plea to bring agriculture into a fair degree of equality with other parts of economic life."

Other comment:

C. M. Crawford, who manages a 423-acre farm near Lebanon, Ind.:

"Roosevelt realizes that the difference in prices between the farmer and consumer is too great and any method he proposes to remedy this condition has my support."

Arlo Wickersham, dairy farmer, of Charlevoix, Mich.:

"The Government must control production according to the market demand. Overproduction has been one of the farmer's biggest problems. To control it the Government must help."

Walter Arseneau, Baverville, Ill., said:

"I raised 9,000 bushels of corn this year and I anticipate a price of 60 cents a bushel next fall, the highest price in many years. That is my proof that Roosevelt's policies are the profit hopes of the farmer."

Lawrence Baldner, of Dallas Center, Iowa:

"I agree with the President's ideas of balancing agriculture with industry and business. I also believe the new Canadian trade agreement is going to help American farmers."

White House to Keep Beer and Wine on Tap

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt yesterday indicated that demands of liquor opponents that no alcohol be served in the White House would be ignored.

At her press conference the liquor question was answered with the remark that her original statement on that subject still stood. This was that any guest who asks for beer may have it and that two light American wines are served with state dinners.

President Roosevelt receiving honorary degree from Father John F. O'Hara, president of the University of Notre Dame, at South Bend, Ind., yesterday, where President hit religious persecution.

Text of Notre Dame Address

By the Associated Press.

South Bend, Ind., Dec. 9.—The following is the text of President Roosevelt's address today at Notre Dame University:

In acknowledging the honor which through the granting of this degree the University of Notre Dame confers upon me, I wish first personally to thank your president, the Very Rev. John F. O'Hara, and all the members of your faculty. I deeply appreciate the honor and the accompanying citation. One in public life learns that personally he can never be worthy of the honors that come to him as an official of the United States. But it is equally true that I am most happy to be honored. The honor places upon me an additional obligation to try to live up to the citation—both for the sake of my country and as a new alumnus of the University of Notre Dame. I am glad to take part in this special convocation called to honor the new commonwealth of the Philippines.

Almost 40 years ago the United States took over the sovereignty of the Philippine Islands. The acceptance of sovereignty was but an obligation to serve the people of the Philippines until the day they might themselves be independent and take their own place among the nations of the world.

Welcomes Commonwealth.

We are here to welcome the commonwealth. I consider it one of the happiest events of my office as President of the United States to have signed in the name of the United States the instrument which will give national freedom to the Philippine people.

The time is not given me to recite the history of those 40 years. That history reveals one of the most extraordinary examples of national co-operation, national adjustment and national independence the world has ever witnessed. It is a tribute to the genius of the Philippine people.

Subject to the government of a country other than their own, they generously adjusted themselves to conditions often not to their liking; they patiently waited; they forfeited none of that freedom which is natively theirs as a people, and which they have so definitely expressed with due regard for fundamental human rights in their new constitution.

Sees Course Right One.

We have a clear right also to congratulate ourselves as a people because in the long run we have chosen the right course with respect to the Philippine Islands. Through our power we have not sought our own benefit. Through our power we have sought to benefit others.

That both nations kept to the policy leading to this most happy result is due to the fact that both nations have the deepest respect for the inalienable rights of man. Those rights were specifically championed more than a century and a half ago in our own Declaration of Independence. Those same rights are championed in the new constitution of the Philippine commonwealth.

There can be no true national life either within a nation itself or between that nation and other nations unless there be the specific acknowledgment of, and the support of organic law to, the rights of man. Supreme among those rights we, and now the Philippine Commonwealth, hold to be the rights of freedom of education and freedom of religious worship.

Principles Exemplified.

This university from which we send our welcome to the new commonwealth exemplifies the principles of which I speak. Through the history of this great middle west—its first explorers and first missionaries — Joliet, Marquette, De LaSalle, Hennepin—its lone eagle, Father Badin, who is buried here—its apostolic Father Sorin, founder of Notre Dame University—its zealous missionaries of other faiths—its pioneers of varied nationalities—all have contributed to the upbuilding of our country because all have subscribed to those fundamental principles of freedom—freedom of education, freedom of worship.

Long ago, George Mason in the Virginia Declaration of Rights, voiced what has become one of the deepest convictions of the American people: "Religion, or the duty which we owe to our Creator, and the manner of discharging it, can be directed only by reason and conviction, not by force or violence, and therefore all men are equally entitled to the free exercise of religion according to the dictates of conscience."

Hold Torch of Liberty.

In the conflict of policies and of political systems which the world today witnesses, the United States has held forth for its own guidance and for the guidance of other nations if they will accept it, this great torch of liberty of human thought, liberty of human conscience. We will never lower it. We will never permit, if we can help it, the light to grow dim. Rather through every means legitimately within our power and our office, we will seek to increase that light, that its rays may extend the farther; that its glory may be seen even from afar.

Every vindication of the sanctity of these rights at home; every prayer that other nations may accept them; is an indication of how virile, how living they are in the hearts of every true American.

Of their own initiative, by their own appreciation, the Philippine Commonwealth has now also championed them before the world. Through the favor of Divine Providence may they be blessed as a people with prosperity. May they grow in grace through their own constitution to the peace and well-being of the whole world.

U. S. Completes Tax Conspiracy Case Against 3

Justice Letts Overrules Motion by Defense for 'Not Guilty' Verdict.

A motion for a directed verdict of not guilty in favor of Frank B. McElhill, John W. Hardgrove and Henning Nelson, who are charged with conspiring to defraud the Government in connection with an extra tax assessment on the income of Thomas N. McCarter, New Jersey utilities magnate, was overruled in the District Supreme Court late yesterday by Justice F. Dickinson Letts.

Ending its case with dramatic suddenness, the prosecution brought consternation to defense attorneys who expected the case to last until late today. The trio of attorneys representing the alleged conspirators then gathered their forces and made a determined assault on the case.

First Leo A. Rover, former United States attorney for the District, then William E. Leahy, one of the city's leading attorneys, and then William H. Collins demanded that Justice Letts instruct the jury to bring in a verdict finding all of the defendants not guilty because of the lack of evidence in the Government's case.

Their demands were met with arguments by Leslie C. Garnett, United States attorney, and his assistant, George McNeil, that the case be submitted to the jury for determination because of the numerous allegations of a conspiracy the Government offered in evidence. After listening to arguments lasting two hours, Justice Letts ruled he would leave the matter in the hands of the jury.

Slight warning of the close of the prosecution's case was given. Special agents of the intelligence section of the Treasury Department had been called in wholesale numbers to relate conversations they overheard between the three defendants, the conversations being recorded through wire tapping machinations.

Following the last agent, who related a telephone conversation between McElhill and Nelson, Garnett arose and announced the Government had finished its case. For a minute there was complete silence, while defense attorneys pondered their next move.

Hardgrove, Nelson and McElhill are charged with conspiring to defraud the Government in connection with an extra assessment of $149,000 that was to have been made on the 1932 income tax of Thomas N. McCarter. A contract which entitled McElhill to a $10,000 fee if he was able to successfully prosecute McCarter's appeal from the ruling was introduced in evidence.

McCarter had asserted a taxable income of only $32,000 in 1932, and the Treasury had levied an assessment on the higher figure.

Defense attorneys last night indicate they might stand on the case as it now exists, and refuse to introduce any testimony on the theory the Government had failed to make a case.

The 158 bathtubs and other plumbing equipment were valued by Fitzgerald at $14,000.

'Patents Pools' Imperil Nation, Witness Says

Pangborn, Sea Flyer, Calls U. S. Defenseless Before Air Raiders.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Dec. 9.—Assertion that American "patent pools" have left the United States defenseless against foreign bombing raids, particularly raids which might originate in Japan, were made today before the congressional committee investigating patent pools.

Clyde Pangborn, aerial conqueror of both the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, uttered the words of warning.

"Japan," he said, "has organized a suicide corps to man aerial torpedoes capable of destroying New York, Chicago and other American cities in a few hours.

"Her air force is easily capable of occupying the Aleutian Islands and, using that as a base, destroying our larger population centers without hindrance.

"Patent pools have left America defenseless against any foreign power except Canada, which has an aerial bombing force of only two planes, built in 1923.

"New Yorkers should be supplied at once with 6,000,000 to 7,000,000 gas masks, and if the Army has not already planned to do the same for every large city it is guilty of grave neglect."

Electrical Group Sues Union Local

By the Associated Press.

New York, Dec. 9.—Charging restraint of trade, the National Electrical Manufacturers Association and 14 of its members filed suit in Federal Court today for an injunction and damages against Local No. 3 of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers.

The suit charged that the union and six of its officers had forced local contractors and others to refrain from buying products of the plaintiffs. The action was brought under the Sherman anti-trust laws.

S. L. Nicholson, assistant to the vice president of Westinghouse Electric Co., and vice president of the N. E. M. A., said "coercive tactics" of the union cost the plaintiffs more than a $1,000,000 in business annually.

Boundary Plan Draws Attack By Cummings

Proposal Held Unsatisfactory as Rep. Smith Calls Terms Fair.

Additional evidence that the Virginia-District boundary report is in for heated debate when Congress convenes piled up yesterday as a Cabinet member branded it "unsatisfactory" and a Virginia Representative called the commission's recommendations fair and proper.

Attorney General Homer S. Cummings issued a statement which claims that the report "is open to objection on various grounds." Meanwhile, on Capitol Hill, Representative Howard W. Smith, who sponsored the legislation establishing the Virginia-District of Columbia boundary commission and whose district includes the land at issue, hailed the group's conclusions.

"As the commission was appointed by Congress," said Cummings, "and was directed to report to Congress, it would not be appropriate to make any extended comments until the matter formally is submitted and under consideration.

"I may say, however, that the report is unsatisfactory from the standpoint of the Government and is open to objection on various grounds, especially in view of its apparent conflict with two decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States on the precise points at issue."

Smith said he saw no reason why anyone should dispute the claim of Virginia to the Washington-Hoover Airport and other property on which Arlington County has been collecting taxes for many years.

The commission recommended that practically all property on the west side of Mount Vernon boulevard be turned over to Virginia and that on the east side, both below and above water, be awarded to the United States Government and the District.

Arlington County has been collecting about $12,000 annually from the Washington Airport alone and is consequently opposing all efforts to transfer or sell it to the Federal Government either for a District airport or for a National Capital park.

Smith said the decision, if accepted by both Virginia and Congress, would not affect the status of Gravelly Point, which he has sponsored for some nine years as a site for a District airport.

Laffoon Ready to Turn Reins Over to Chandler

Frankfort, Ky., Dec. 9 (AP).—Gov. Ruby Laffoon tonight was ready to turn over the reins of Kentucky's State government at noon tomorrow to Albert Benjamin Chandler, of Versailles, the Lieutenant Governor with whom the Governor has been at odds politically almost since the two took office together four years ago.

Today was Gov. Laffoon's last day in office, and he spent it granting pardons, appointing Kentucky colonels and receiving personal friends.

Impeach Governor, S. C. Official Urges

Legislator, 24, Acts on Eve of Special Session.

By the Associated Press.

Columbia, S. C., Dec. 9.—A suggestion that Gov. Olin Johnston be impeached came from Representative Lonnie Causey, of Horry County, today on the eve of a special legislative session the Governor called to meet tomorrow to solve a tangle over State highway control.

Causey, 24-year-old law student, said in a signed statement that "I conceive it my duty to vote for and, if necessary, to introduce the impeachment proceedings."

He asserted he believed the Governor had "violated his oath of office by not fully abiding by the Supreme Court's decision."

The court held the Governor's military control of the highway department unconstitutional and enjoined a special board he had set up in a decision Thursday. The board resigned, but the Governor continued to keep troops on duty at the department and asserted the decision did not affect his right to do so.

Supreme Court Battle Begins On AAA Taxes

institutions against the State's wishes.

Another States' rights case was decided in favor of the States, by a split 6-to-3 decision. A majority of the court held the Government could not impose a special tax on liquor manufacturers and dealers in States remaining dry after repeal, Justice Roberts reading the opinion.

The court majority held the liquor assessment in dry States was a "penalty tax" and declared it a "clear evasion of the police power, inherent in the States, reserved from the grant of powers to the Federal Government by the Constitution."

Justices Brandeis, Stone and Cardozo dissented. In their opinion, read by Cardozo, the court minority held that Congress was not "punishing" in its special liquor levy, but was "laying an excise upon a business conducted in a particular way with notice to the taxpayer that if he embarks upon that business he will be subject to a special burden."

The court failed to take advantage of another chance to rule on the question of State's rights, but upheld a decision of a Mississippi Federal court dismissing an indictment against Fred Hastings for the theft of a bale of cotton from a Federally-licensed warehouse. The Mississippi court also had held that a section of the Federal warehouse act providing for such offenses was invalid, but the Supreme Court did not rule on the validity of the law.

Arguments Begun.

Immediately following the formal decisions and admission of new members to the bar, the court opened arguments in the vital Hoosac Mills processing tax suit before a colorful assembly of notables gathered in the narrow courtroom.

Sitting close by the side of Solicitor General Reed was Attorney General Homer S. Cummings, who argued the Government's gold cases before the Supreme Court last year. Spectators ranged all the way from Bishop James E. Freeman and former Secretary of State Frank B. Kellogg to Rudy Vallee.

Even as Reed opened the arguments, a fresh assault on AAA constitutionality was launched in the form of a brief filed by eight Southern rice millers, recently granted a temporary injunction by the court against processing tax collections. The new petition asked for a permanent injunction.

Held "Legal Excises."

Speaking in a low but distinct voice, Reed contended the AAA taxes are legal excises on processing, which can be lawfully collected without regard to the purposes for which they are used, inasmuch as they go into the Treasury as a part of the general revenues.

Reed was interrupted from time to time by pointed questioning by the court. Justice McReynolds wanted to know "who fixes the tax and how they do it?" Reed said Government statistics were used in the compilation, and the tax was "fixed by statute," with the end in view of giving the farmer a fair exchange value on the basis of goods he purchased.

Although some of the questions propounded by court liberals appeared helpful to the Government's position, some by conservatives were the other way, and it seemed futile to speculate how the tenor of court sentiment tended.

Opening the case for Hoosac Mills, Pepper, former Republican Senator from Pennsylvania, attacked the validity of the AAA apart from the question of alleged illegal delegation of power, which he said would be argued by one of his colleagues.

He said he did not dispute "that the Secretary of Agriculture did the best job he could" and none as to "the fidelity with which he acted."

"We charge no irregularities," the mill counsel said. "It goes much deeper than that."

His point was, he said, that "the whole scheme falls," once it is demonstrated that the purpose of the tax is regulation, unconstitutionally invading the rights reserved for the States.

"If we are to have a national parliament instead of a national legislature," he told the court, "it must be done by Constitutional means.

He slapped repeatedly at what he called the "golden age period" of from 1909 to 1914 on which the Administration based its farm purchasing statistics.

As the Supreme Court came to grips with the Hoosac Mills case, belief was expressed that it will pass not only on the original law, under which the millers brought suit, but on the AAA amendments enacted last session as well.

This opinion was strengthened as the court yesterday for the second time rejected a petition of the Washburn Crosby Co., flour millers, to review a case affecting the amendments directly.

Opinions handed down by the court yesterday included a decision upholding a ruling by the Minnesota Supreme Court holding invalid the once generally used "standard exhibition contract" between motion-picture producers and exhibitors. An appeal by the Fox Film Corporation was dismissed on the ground that no Federal question was involved.

Toy Fund Path To Ill Children Clear for Santa

Terminal Taxicab Co. has enrolled in The Post Toy Fund as a Santa Claus aid. By calling Decatur 5130, one of these drivers will call at a house and bring new toys or used ones, in good condition, to The Washington Post Toy Fund headquarters in The Post Building, free of charge.

From the Social Service Department of the Chevy Chase School the students sent a welcome $5 to swell the fund. Two sisters, Betty Ruth Aten and Mary Ann Aten, gave $1.50 each to aid the fund.

Uncle Sam's workers, the huge army of Government employes, are among the new groups interested in putting The Post Toy and Doll Fund over the top. From many of the Government bureaus came news of joint funds being raised to add to The Post Fund, and collections of toys being made among the workers.

The pathetic interest being taken in the progress of the fund by those who are to be recipients of its bounty was shown again yesterday in letters which came to The Post Toy Director.

Here are just a few of them:

"I am the mother of five children," wrote a working woman, "and I cannot give them any toys this Christmas. We lost our home in July, not being able to keep up the payments. If you could send a little something for them I know this Christmas would be brighter."

Just as that letter was opened came a message from Miss Connie Cooksey, of Chi Sigma sorority, asking the Post Toy Fund to supply the names of some needy children who would be without toys this Christmas unless Santa received some outside help in these cases. "Every year," said Miss Cooksey, "the group picks out some family for which it tries to get up a merry Christmas."

With perfect childish faith, a little boy of 10 wrote to "Santa Claus, The Washington Post," and stated his case directly and with evident sincerity. "I have waited," he wrote, "but as Christmas is almost here I thought I had better write to you and ask you to be sure and come to my sister and myself on Christmas. Daddy is dead and now we have no money to send you, but if you can bring us some toys and candy for Christmas we will be so glad. Mother works and it takes every penny she earns to try and keep us together. It is very hard for her."

Hull Host at Luncheon For Aviation Delegation

Official Entertainment Brings Brief Break in Diplomatic Mourning Here After Death of Princess Victoria.

By Evelyn Peyton Gordon.

Entertaining in Washington can be canceled by official mourning more than by any other factor, for although officials in state mourning may attend certain informal functions, they cannot entertain themselves.

Last year, when delegates of the Federation Internationale Aeronautique met in Washington, a round of brilliant dinners, receptions and luncheons had been planned for them. On the first evening of their arrival the Polish Ambassador, Mr. Stanislaw Patek, gave them a reception, which was preceded by formal dinners. That was the beginning and the end of the entertaining, for the next day the King of Yugoslavia was assassinated, and the ruling houses of so many countries were so affected that a pall of mourning rested on the Capital for many weeks.

Last week there arrived members of the British, Irish Free State and Canadian Aviation Mission to confer with United States officials on a transatlantic air service. A number of functions had been planned for the delegates by the British Embassy and Canadian and Irish Free State Legations, but the death of Princess Victoria, sister of King George, imposed a four-week-period of mourning and curtailed the entertaining.

Only strictly official functions are permitted under the ban of mourning, and one of these events took place yesterday when the Secretary of State, Mr. Cordell Hull, entertained at luncheon at the Carlton Hotel.

The guests included the British Ambassador, Sir Ronald Lindsay; the Air Attache of the embassy, Group Capt. T. E. B. Howe; the director general of the general post-office, Col. Sir Donald Banks, K. C. B., D. S. O., M. P., of the British mission; Lieut. Col. F. C. Shelmerdine, C. I. E., O. B. E., director general of civil aviation, air ministry, British mission; Mr. D. O. Lumley, O. B. E., of general post-office, British mission; Mr. F. E. Entwistle, technical expert, British mission; Mr. Ivor McClure, technical expert, British mission; Mr. C. G. L. Syers, of the dominions office, British mission; Mr. C. E. Woods Humphery, managing director of Imperial Airways, Ltd., British Mission; the Minister of the Irish Free State, Mr. Michael MacWhite, and the members of the Irish mission, Mr. J. P. Walshe, secretary of the department of external affairs, and Mr. J. Leydon, secretary of the department of industry and commerce.

Also present were Charge d'Affaires of Canada, Mr. Hume Wrong, and members of the Canadian mission, including Mr. L. C. Christie, Counselor of the Department of External Affairs; Mr. George Herring, Chief Superintendent of Air Mail Service; Mr. J. A. Wilson, Controller of Civil Aviation, of the Department of National Defense; Mr. P. T. Coolican, Assistant Deputy, Postmaster General, and Mr. F. E. Jolliffe, of the Postoffice Department.

Others present were the Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Daniel C. Roper; the Assistant Secretary of Commerce, Mr. John Monroe Johnson; the Director of the Bureau of Air Commerce, Mr. Eugene Vidal; the Assistant Director of the Bureau of Air Commerce, Mr. Rex Martin; the Second Assistant Postmaster General, Mr. Harllee Branch; the Assistant Secretary of State, Mr. R. McCrary, acting chief of the Bureau of Aeronautics of the Navy Department; Lieut. Col. Martin F. Scanlon, commanding officer of Bolling Field; Commander Alfred E. Montgomery, commanding officer of the Naval Air Station; Lieut. Comdr. C. C. Von Paulson, chief of the Aviation Office of the United States Coast Guard; Mr. Frank Dow, assistant Commissioner of Customs; Mr. John Lamiell, director of International Postal Service; Mr. Juan Trippe, president of the Pan American Airways System, and Mr. John C. Hearth Kettle Is Both Useful And Decorative Gift Particularly Suitable for Young Couple Paying for Their Home.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

CHRISTMAS shopping loses its burdensome aspect and becomes a gay adventure if you follow the formula prescribed by one local shopper in a letter to this column. "To suit the gift to the other fellow's personality, is the thing," she writes. "Most of us usually try to buy something that takes our fancy without giving enough thought to whether it will suit someone else.

To choose a gift that will delight someone she says we all ought to try this formula; one part consideration of a person's home and habits and what he likes as well as needs; one part consideration of a person's characteristics or personality. Add these and the sum suggests the gift!

Not a bad idea, you know, and apt to work. For instances, suppose you allot $5 for a gift to the young nephew and his wife. Gay, they've just bought a home, and one feature of that home which they're particularly thrilled over is the big open fireplace. So what? Well, just this. They're having a not-so-easy-time paying for their home, so something practical is to be preferred. What could you buy that they need and that they'll really like? The fireplace is the clew. And one of the ever ready and handy fire pots is the answer! The price, $4.95.

A shapely black iron kettle is fitted with a porous stone. When the kettle is filled with kerosene the stone absorbs just enough so that when you put the stone—it has a long handle by the way—into the fireplace and light it, it burns gleefully, and for a long time, thus acting as sure-fire kindling.

You keep the little fire pot on your hearth and it is both ornamental and useful.

Packaged Bayberry Candles.

WITH A PUNGENT out-of-doors fragrance are the bayberry candles said to bring you good luck at Christmas time. An F street store has a supply of these and sells them in pairs for 40 cents. They come already packaged in a Christmas box.

In the same shop you'll find bunches of bayberries. While they lack the glamour of the bright green and red holly, and cannot rival the striking color scheme of the black and red bittersweet sprays, nevertheless there's a certain fascination about the silvery gray bayberries clustered on the dull black stems.

Pastel Colored Sweaters.

INTERESTING for winter because they give variety to the wardrobe and particularly appropriate for Southern wear are the lovely pastel colored sweaters in a downtown store.

Such sweaters are excellent investments. While you brave the polar weather during the next month or two they're warm and pretty to wear with your coat suit or with a separate skirt under your coat. If you follow the birds to the South, they'll be indispensable there.

Their styles, and dainty colors give them an extra dash of femininity. And, of course, the price—$2—adds to their appeal.

Gifts for Little Girls

SPECIAL Christmas gift items which will not fail to delight the heart of small girls are being shown in the infants' department of a local store. They're the Scootles apron dresses—(named after Rose O'Neil's newest character, Scootles). They come in delicate pastel shades, with pockets, adorable ruffles and sashes. But best of all, they're packed in individual suitcases—red, green, or blue, with a Scootles decorating the cover. Not only will the little lass from 2 to 6 take pride in wearing the Scootles finery but the suitcase will afford many hours of pleasure. She can even use it for a week-end visit to the country.

Grecian Influence

Grecian Effect Is Carried Out In New Styles

Gold and Silver Kid Sandals Are Being Worn With Draped Dresses.

Ever since Helen of Troy cut such a wide swath as a charmer, women have had hankering eyes on Grecian attire. Now this winter they can indulge in many of the style tricks of the belles of Athens and be considered ultra-modern.

Many of the new evening gowns that will appear at holiday parties carry out the Grecian effect of drapery. And incidentally the drapery is arranged to bring out the best lines of the figure. It may look simple, but it is a work of art and design.

The new shirred silhouette is popular not only in gowns of soft white crepes and chiffons which definitely suggest the Parthenon, but also in black satin and velvet dresses and frocks of all colors and materials. Some of the dresses are extremely full at the bottom, giving a graceful effect in movement. Others are more tightly fitted below the hips, falling into folds at the bottom of the skirt.

Draperies which fall into trousers are becoming increasingly evident in evening gowns. Many other draped skirts have slits in the center front.

To carry out further the Grecian effect, bare feet with sandals are appearing on ball room floors. Flat soled gold and silver kid sandals are popular with the draped dresses. Evening headdresses including crowns of laurel leaves add further to the Grecian effect.

PLEASANT HOMES

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

WE REALIZE that there's grave danger in advising a man to give his wife a rug for Christmas. Because left to his own devices there's no telling what kind of a rug he might select. However, there's another aspect of the situation. Most any lady with a house needs another handsome rug, so we don't want to discourage her prospects. The solution is for a man to oh, so casually, steer his wife through the rug department when they're shopping and get her to commit herself on something she does like and want.

One man has been doing this for weeks now, until his wife—not letting on that she suspects the motif in his maneuvers—asked our advice about what rug she should hint for. Her living room has figured wall paper with an ivory ground and a misty suggestion of blue in the pattern, a sofa in soft rust-colored rep and two flowered chairs. She can't decide between a broadloom rug and an American Oriental rug, but she is almost sure she wants blue to be the predominating color. What would we decide on for her room? Well, we think either rug would be quite all right for this room, but the question is—which rug does she like best apart from the room? Because a rug is going to last longer than the wall paper and the furniture coverings, so it should be bought for itself rather than to go with something that will be so much sooner replaced. As for the color—blue is always a pleasing and satisfying shade for a rug, so it should be a very safe selection, providing she isn't settling on it just because it would complement the wall paper and the furniture coverings.

"How Can I Overcome This Terrible Feeling of Futility?" Asks 18-Year-Old Freshman in College Made Ill by Disappointment in Love.

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: I am a freshman in college and 18 years old. I find myself in a spot that is ruining my morale and ambition. I have always planned to be a commercial artist. When I was in high school I was quite popular, frivolous, gay, talkative and full of pep and life. I have always gone with boys and liked several quite well, so I know when I'm up to myself I can be popular.

However, during the past year I grew to care very deeply for a young man about 22 years of age. Perhaps it was because I did care for him so much that he stopped seeing me—for all of a sudden he stopped going with me. It broke me up terribly as I am quite sincere in my likes and dislikes, and I had perfect faith in him. I even became quite ill. When he heard I was ill, he came back to see me. That was last summer, and I had expected to get over it before this. I have only seen him twice since then, both times very unexpectedly. I have lived in constant expectation since September so that I have become quite nervous and am on edge most of the time.

* * * *

If I were convinced he doesn't like me and doesn't intend to go with me again, I think I could forget him, but I'm not. I am unable to give my all to my work. I feel that everything is so futile and useless. My career seems like a pipe-dream. I have lost my "line" with boys and have developed an inferiority complex so that I feel ill at ease around them. Yet I feel that I am missing a great deal, and since I am accustomed to going everywhere and doing all that most young girls are doing, I can't bear to be left out. I know that I have spunk in me, but somehow I've lost it.

* * * *

Is there any way for me to overcome this terrible feeling of futility so that I can enjoy life and make my work worth while? Will I ever get over this feeling that all boys are false and untrue? Will I develop a stronger character by deciding not to go with boys at all, or by developing the old line and firatatious attitude I had when I was in high school? I would rather not do the latter. I will greatly appreciate any advice you may have to offer. Very truly yours,

PEG.

Become a Realist.

DEAR PEG: Yes, there is a way for you to overcome that terrible feeling of futility; to recover your old enjoyment of life and to rekindle your old enthusiasm for your chosen career. The answer is: become a realist. Webster's dictionary defines a realist as "one devoted to the real as opposed to the imaginary."

* * * *

The first step toward becoming a realist is to learn to face facts courageously and honestly and recognize them for what they are. In the realm of the emotions, it is indisputably true that actions speak louder than words. If this young man reciprocated your feeling for him and intended to go with you ever again, he would not have avoided your company consistently for months. His actions declare his present indifference. The reason you aren't fully convinced of his indifference is because you are taking refuge from painful reality in a dream world of wishful thinking. And because you have retreated into an imaginary world of your own creating, the world of actuality has lost its meaning. To quote your own words, everything seems futile and useless, your career seems like a pipe dream, you have lost your "line" with boys.

* * * *

In attempting to spare yourself the pain of what might be described as a sort of major emotional operation; the sharp but short-lived suffering you would necessarily experience in accepting with finality this boy's exit from your life, you have invited instead a long, drawn-out, pointless, nervous agony. That is what you tell me when you say, "I have lived in constant expectation since September, so that I have become quite nervous and on edge most of the time." Grit your teeth and get this thing over with.

He's gone. When we lose some loved one by death, do we retreat into our home, draw down the shades and wander through the rooms, pretending the loved one is in some room just adjoining, likely to walk forth to meet us at any future moment? If we have good sense, we don't. We decently bury our grief with our loss and address ourself with courage and hope, with good cheer and self-control, to all our remaining contacts with life. We build new contacts, new interests, to take the place of what we have lost. We learn that time is the great heal'er.

* * * *

Will you ever get over feeling all boys are false and untrue? If you become a realist, of course you will. You will see the truth so clearly that you will realize this bitter self-deceptive conclusion is a defense mechanism of your injured ego. The fact that you failed to hold the interest of the first boy you fell in love with doesn't mean that even he is false and untrue; much less that all other boys are. It's the prerogative of every youth and maiden to fall in and out of love with every change of the moon, and wise are those who learn to adjust themselves philosophically to the ebb and flow of the tide.

* * * *

Certainly you wouldn't be developing character in avoiding the company of men in future. Such a course of action would be an italicized confession of moral cowardice and social defeat—a panicky retreat off the broad highway of life. Neither would you be developing character in playing a falsely flirtatious role. When you were gay, heart whole and fancy free, the role of flirt was no doubt ingenuously real and becoming to you. For the time being, however, it no longer truly reflects your inner self. And to that inner self essentially you must be true if you would develop authentic character and winning personality.

* * * *

My advice to you is see a doctor about your nervous condition. He can prescribe remedies for such ailments as sleeplessness, loss of appetite and general debility. Get as much exercise out of doors as possible. Walk miles every day. Force yourself to take an interest in your appearance. If it can be managed, buy some new clothing, have a new permanent wave, keep your nails exquisitely manicured, your skin beautifully cared for. Take an interest in the comings and goings of your friends. See that you are included in their activities.

* * * *

No good comes of grieving over spilled milk; of counting chicks which will never hatch. If you would compensate intelligently for what you have lost, you must begin at once to make the most of what remains. Live every day as it comes to the fullest. If you will do this, I guarantee it won't be long before you'll find yourself enjoying life in spite of what's happened. It's proverbial, of course, that the quickest way to forget a disappointment in love is to find a new heart interest. Keep your chin up and look forward confidently to such eventuality.

Women's Wages Studied by U. S.

Entitled to Sufficient Pay to Support Dependents, Bureau Says.

By the Associated Press.

THE WOMEN'S Bureau of the Labor Department asserts that a working woman is entitled to a minimum wage large enough not only to cover the cost of living for herself but also for dependents.

"Wages should be established on the basis of occupation and not on the basis of sex or race," the bureau said in a study.

"Women's earnings are low; pay envelopes of $7, $6 and even less are still received by many women.

"Such wages are due partly to the belief that "women's work' has little economic value, though many of their occupations require great dexterity and skill. In practically all lines of women's work in industry, higher wages are deserved and should be paid."

The bureau gave these estimates of minimum costs of living for one woman per week:

New York City, room and meals alone, $14.69; all expenses: Boston, $15; Chicago, $20; Kansas City, $16; New Orleans, $9.96; Philadelphia, $21; Cincinnati, $17.50.

The bureau said surveys of 17 States showed as medians of week's earnings:

Under $9, Alabama and Mississippi; $9 and under $11, Kentucky, South Carolina, and Texas; $11 and under $13, Arkansas, Delaware, Georgia, Kansas, Michigan, Missouri and Tennessee; $13 and under $15, New Jersey, Ohio, and Oklahoma; $15 and under $17, Florida and Rhode Island.

Realism Is Seen As Best Method For Portraits

Facial Lines Depict Personality, Says Mrs. Brice, D. C. Artist.

By Marguerite C. Rand.

WOMEN who have lines in their faces should not let that fact disturb them, according to Louise Spain Brice, portrait and landscape painter.

Mrs. Brice is a recent addition to Washington's art colony, having come from Texas with her husband, Maj. Brice, officer in the United States Army.

"The lines in women's faces express the development of their characters and personalities," she said. "I have never been able to understand why women so frequently want me to paint them without those lines. If I did, the face would be blank and characterless and the portrait would not resemble the subject, either as she is now, or as she was, before she acquired the lines, for how can I know how she looked some years ago?"

At what age should a woman have her portrait painted?

"There are perhaps three stages in a woman's development which should be expressed through this medium," Mrs. Brice said. "As a young girl almost any woman presents a lovely picture. A second portrait should be made in her early thirties when the development of her personality has given some character lines to her face, and a third in her sixties or seventies when she has acquired the deep understanding of age and the contentment that rich memories bring."

Thirties Glamorous Age.

Mrs. Brice believes, however, that if a woman is to have only one portrait she should select her early thirties—her most glamorous age. At that age, she said, a woman has achieved her greatest beauty, her full development of personality, yet she has not acquired too many lines while her beauty has not begun in any way to fade. The painter emphasized that one cannot make hard and fast rules. There may be a great variation according to circumstances. She cited as an example a well-known American actress who admits fifty years and yet is perhaps at the height of her career as well as at the zenith of her beauty.

What should a woman wear for her portrait? Mrs. Brice says that, as portraits are ordinarily placed in drawing rooms, a woman should wear a dress suitable to such a background; something that would adorn her drawing room, preferably evening clothes. A style which is radical or bizarre should never be worn, she said, for a portrait is usually a thing of permanence. In material Mrs. Brice's first choice would be velvet, for she believes velvet is the most flattering material a woman can wear with its rich depth of color and the way in which it falls into soft, clinging lines. She also favors lace or satin. Mrs. Brice believes that if a woman should desire a full-length portrait, evening clothes are particularly important, because the long dress now in style is so much more graceful than a shorter one.

Mrs. Brice has painted since she was four years old. In college she did portraits of all the girls who would sit for her. These portraits totaled some 300.

Studies Personality.

When Mrs. Brice has an order for a portrait she frequently does no painting at the first sitting. She converses with the subject of her portrait at length, on varying matters in an effort to gain a very definite impression of the character and personality.

Are pretty women easy to paint? "It depends on the type of beauty," Mrs. Brice said. "If it all rests in feature and color, yes. If it depends a great deal on vivacity and vivid personality, then it is a real problem, for it is extremely difficult to express these qualities in a face in repose as of necessity it must be on canvas. A woman whose features are not perfect, who might be termed ugly by some observers, is often a more interesting challenge to a portrait painter than the woman whom the casual observer would call beautiful."

Mrs. Brice is also a successful landscape painter. In El Paso, her husband's last station, she did landscapes of the desert and mountains which have won acclaim for her.

Mrs. Brice feels that art is an ideal career for a woman with family responsibilities. In any artistic pursuit a woman's hours are her own and she can arrange her home duties so that they will not interfere with her career, she said.

Mrs. Brice applies her art to her home. She occupies a three-story house and the third floor she has converted into a studio. It was a real conversion, for she found it unused and full of cobwebs. After cleaning it thoroughly, over all the walls and ceiling she has tacked brown paper. The lowest portion of the walls she has painted a soft green. The floor was in bad condition, but now it is most attractive. The center is painted black, surrounded by a border of large orange and black squares. An antique chair, recently reupholstered, occupies one corner. There are other chairs which she has painted black with touches of gold. The whole effect is so charming and homelike that her family is trying to appropriate it for a living room, but a studio it remains. The walls are adorned with landscapes, done in the soft colors of the Western desert and mountains.

Prefers Personality to Beauty

Health of Child Requires Own Sleeping Room

By Alice C. Richmond.

IT was not the lack of space which made Mrs. Brown have the youngest child sleep in her room. She liked to have him near her at night, and the child, having grown used to it, objected to sleeping in another room alone.

One of the most attractive features of the arrangement from the child's point of view was to be able to crawl into mother's bed at night if he had a bad dream or felt wakeful.

It was not good for the child and certainly hampered the Browns. Any privacy was impossible, for as soon as the lights were turned on or even a whispered conversation begun, the child would grow restless and probably wake up. If the room was to be kept warm enough for comfort when the parents went to bed, the windows must be kept closed for several hours after the child went to sleep.

If possible, a child should sleep in a room by himself as soon as weaned. Certainly under no conditions except the most crowded should he ever sleep in the room with his parents after he is a year old. If it can be managed no other way, his bed should be on wheels so that it can be pushed into the living room when his parents are ready to retire.

There are delightful occasions in nearly everyone's memory when he was allowed to crawl into bed with mother. Moments when the vividness of nightmares made the comfort of human contact essential. But such occasions should be very rare. They should not be encouraged and certainly should have ceased by the time a child is 6 or 8 years old.

Sinus Openings Often Infected By Nasal Spray

Month or Two in a Dry Climate Is Found Cure in Some Cases.

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

AS we look at the faces of our friends we are usually pleased with their attractive features. We observe the forehead, the eyebrows, the eyes, the nose, the cheek bones, the mouth, the teeth, etc. Soft contours blend the structures one into another.

Let us imagine that we have X-ray eyes and that we can look through the soft structures of the face and visualize the bones of the skull. The cheek bones may be rather high and prominent. Strangely enough, instead of solid bone or merely a bony covering we will observe that in the cheek bones there are hollow spaces the size of a walnut. Directly back of or behind the nose small rooms are seen in the ethmoid and sphenoid bones. All these areas are called sinuses and are lined with a mucus secreting membrane. Whenever they become infected inflammation occurs, pus forms, and there is pain, a discharge of mucus and pus, a general feeling of malaise and discomfort, and some temperature whenever the infection is acute.

As we would expect, nature has provided drainage for most of these spaces so that when they become infected the products of inflammation may flow into the nose or throat, giving evidence of an acute cold. In the maxillary sinuses there is a curious anomaly, however, in that the point of exit is high above the bottom of the sinus, that is, when we are standing erect. Because of this unusually high outlet pus may collect within the spaces on either side of the face and find great difficulty in making its way into the nasal passages; in other words, water will not run uphill. At best the opening into the nose is small. If we still walked on all fours the maxillary sinuses would drain satisfactorily.

Rest of Great Value.

It is probably true that we can avoid 90 per cent of our antrum infections if we will practice better personal hygiene and, at the same time, take proper care of the acute cold. When symptoms of a cold appear, rest in bed is of greater value than all other forms of treatment put together. A gallon of a nasal antiseptic will not equal an hour of relaxation in bed plus the drinking of an adequate amount of fluid. We may wash out the mouth with impunity, but not the nasal passages when infection exists therein. A drop or two of some nonirritating antiseptic oil may be used in each nostril several times daily with good effect. The body may be trusted, through its own defense forces, to destroy the infection; after which the nasal mucous membrane will in most instances return to its normal state.

Many authors, however, believe that once a sinus infection has become deep-seated it will exist throughout life and no amount of operative drainage will change the picture appreciably. It is certain that in some cases a month or two spent in a warm, equable climate with a dry atmosphere will relieve, if not cure, many of these infections.

Comfort, Good Looks Combined in Gift Slippers; They Range From Sheepskin to Fur-Trimmed Kid

Velvet Mules With Silver Lacing Have Festive Yuletide Air.

By Amos Parrish.

NEW YORK, Dec. 9.—Something mighty homey looking about a familiar pair of old slippers . . . but slippers do wear out . . . the new crop are a good looking lot . . . and Christmas is just around the corner!

Ideal for pattering about college "dorms" are warm fleece-lined sheepskins—of the type sketched at the bottom of the picture. These are guaranteed to keep toes toasty-warm on the iciest nights!

Of Glowing Velvet

Gala as dancing pumps are soft velvet mules like those sketched at the top. A bit of narrow silver lacing makes them look properly Christmas-y. These come in glowing colors—rich garnet red—sapphire blue—inky black, and the deep renaissance shades.

Combinations of velvet and gold or silver kid are rich looking, too—and take to gay Christmas wrappings like a stuffed Christmas turkey to cranberry sauce!

Many women, however, prefer tailored boudoir things, and they will cheer simple little affairs like the crepe d'Orsay sketched. This pair is of a black, nubby crepe—but the same kind come in different colors. In bright cheery colors—or navy or black for more conservative souls.

Leaflet on Wrappings.

Fur trimming—usually white or black—makes for a very cozy slipper, and an elegant one, too. While quite the height of luxury are slippers of corduroy trimmed with white lapin, like those sketched.

Whether you're giving elegant slippers or good sturdy tailored ones, or whatever the gift, they'll look mighty exciting in one of the gay Christmas "do-ups" we've planned. If you'd like to know about these, send a stamp to Amos Parrish, care of The Washington Post, for the leaflet "New Ways of Wrapping Christmas Packages."

Holiday Cooking Will Overload Range Unless the Daily Fare Is Carefully Planned

Market Orders Can Be Placed Ahead of Time

Oven Dinner Is Necessary on Day Set Aside for Making Candy.

By Dorothea Duncan.

OUR menus from now until Christmas, if we expect to do any intensive pre-holiday cooking, will have to be planned with an eye to range or oven space. If, for example, tomorrow is to be a day set aside for candy making where the top of the stove will be in constant demand, it will be better to plan an entire oven cooked meal for dinner. If cookies or baked fruit cake is the topic of pre-holiday cookery, the oven will be carrying a load of extra duty, so naturally you will plan to have dishes that can be cooked on top of the range for that day.

D. Duncan.

It will be wise to make a definite calendar of your plans for your pre-holiday cooking. If you know just what days the oven is to be kept busy with extra baking, you can plan your menu in advance so that it will fit right into the scheme of kitchen activity. This way there will be no necessity for a last minute menu.

Shop Well in Advance.

Market orders too can be worked out well in advance so that everything for the daily meals as well as the extra cooking supplies can be ordered in time. It is surprising how many trips to the store for extras you will find it necessary to make if you haven't calculated your needs to a fine point before you begin your kitchen activity. This extra trip or two to the store, or perhaps it will be just a hurried phone call and then a wait until your package is delivered, will cost extra time, and make your temper short and your disposition a bit ruffled. The day will go entirely too fast for the amount that you have accomplished, you will feel unusually tired because events have not run as smoothly as they should and dinner will be anything but a pleasant meal.

You will find that a large roast cooked in the oven will be a grand dish for the day that you are planning any extra top of the range cookery. The meat can be cooked surrounded with vegetables. This type of main course cooked entirely in one pan will make the evening dish washing less of a problem than usual. Apples can be baked at the same time as the meat and vegetables. These two oven dishes and a light salad of greens, a beverage and bread and butter will give you a simply planned and cooked, but well balanced meal.

Reheated Leftover Roast.

If the oven is to be used the following day for Christmas baking, the leftover roast can be reheated in one of a number of interesting ways on top of the range, and other dishes that require cooking over a burner can be planned to accompany the left over roast.

When planning an entire oven meal, choose a dessert that can be successfully baked when other foods are also in the oven. Pastries will not be so successful because the meat and vegetables will produce steam and the pastry will be soggy instead of crisp and flaky. The same difficulty will arise in the baking of most cakes if other foods are being cooked in the oven at the same time. Fruits, or fruit pudding, custards, brown betty, tapiocas, rice pudding and desserts of this type, however, can be baked with excellent results when meat and vegetables also occupy the oven.

Sprinkle Pie Crusts.

In making fruit pies sprinkle the lower crust with flour or brush with egg white before the filling is added to prevent the lower crust from absorbing the juice.

Oven Meals Are Economical as Well as Delicious

Meat, potatoes, vegetables and a dessert can be cooked in an oven at the same time. This type of cookery will be found an ideal solution to the pre-holiday problem especially on the days when use of the top range is planned for the cooking of Christmas candies. The several heat resistant casseroles which contain various dinner dishes can be whisked into the oven leaving a free range at which to continue extra cooking activities.

New Roll Made Of Mince Meat Finding Favor

It Now Appears in Spicy Cinnamon Buns as a Breakfast Food.

LET'S bring mince meat into the breakfast menu. It is simple enough. You just take your favorite cinnamon roll recipe and roll in a large sheet. The mince meat is then spread over the surface of the dough and the whole is rolled up jelly roll fashion and cut in strips and baked like ordinary cinnamon rolls. Here is a recipe that describes every detail of the procedure.

Spicy Cinnamon Rolls.

1½ cups of canned or prepared mince meat
3 cups flour
3 teaspoons baking powder
2 tablespoons sugar
1 teaspoon salt
3 tablespoons shortening
1 egg
⅓ cup milk
6 tablespoons butter
½ cup brown sugar
Cinnamon

Sift flour once, measure, add baking powder, sugar and salt, and sift again. Cut in shortening. Beat egg and add milk. Blend thoroughly with dry ingredients to form a soft dough. Turn onto a slightly floured board and roll into oblong sheet about one-half inch thick.

Next spread with mince meat which should be quite dry, then roll up like a jelly roll and cut into 1½-inch pieces. Cream together the butter and brown sugar and spread on the bottom and sides of a pan, measuring 8 by 8 by 2 inches, and sprinkle lightly with cinnamon. Place rolls with cut edges down in prepared pan. Allow to stand 10 minutes, then bake in a hot oven (425 degrees F.) for 15 minutes; reduce the temperature to 350 degrees F., and bake 25 minutes longer. Remove immediately from pan, turning upside down to serve.

Don't Wrap Hot Bread.

Never wrap hot, freshly baked bread tightly or place in a bread box because moisture will collect and bread will not stay fresh.

Melted Butter and Warm Sirup Suggested for Waffle Breakfast

Sour Cream, Chocolate and Gingerbread Kinds Fine for Cold Weather.

ASK for an electric waffle iron for Christmas if you don't already have one, for there isn't any more practical or convenient automatic table appliance on the market.

It is convenient to bake waffles at the table on an electric waffle iron. Modern waffle irons are equipped with a heat indicator, which is most satisfactory. Pour about one-third cup of waffle batter over the iron, which has been preheated according to the manufacturer's directions. Close the iron and leave closed until steam no longer escapes between the two halves. When done waffles should be crisp and golden brown and easily lifted from the iron with a fork.

Your Sunday morning breakfasts will become famous if you know how to make delicious, crisp, golden brown waffles. Try them tomorrow, and instead of serving them with squares of butter and cold sirup, serve them with pitchers of hot melted butter and warm maple sirup. These hot waffle accompaniments are delicious on a cold winter morning, and they will keep the waffles warm rather than chilling them suddenly, as the applications of cold butter and sirup does.

Sour cream waffles are especially delicious when served with broiled sausages or crisp bacon, or you may prefer to serve them for a guest luncheon as an accompaniment to fried chicken. Try them by the following recipes:

Sour Cream Waffles.

2 cups flour
1½ teaspoons soda
2 teaspoons baking powder
4 eggs
2 teaspoons salt
1½ cups sour cream
1½ cups buttermilk

Mix and sift dry ingredients. Beat eggs separately and add milk and cream to beaten egg yolks, stirring until smooth. Add liquid to dry ingredients, beating only until smooth and fold in stiffly beaten egg whites. Bake in a preheated waffle iron as directed.

Chocolate or gingerbread waffles make ideal cold weather desserts. They can be baked, of course, right at the table between the main course and dessert so that they will be piping hot when served. You will find the hot chocolate waffles excellent with whipped cream or ice cream served sandwich fashion using two waffle quarters piled one on top of the other for each serving. Serve sweetened whipped cream with hot gingerbread waffles, or whipped cream to which a little cottage cheese has been added. Recipe follows:

Chocolate Waffles.

4 tablespoons butter
2 squares chocolate
2 cups sifted cake flour
2½ teaspoons baking powder
¼ teaspoon salt
1 cup sugar
1 egg
¾ cup milk.
1 teaspoon vanilla

Melt chocolate with butter over hot water. Use a pan large enough to serve as a mixing bowl. Sift dry ingredients and add to butter and chocolate mixture. Add the remaining ingredients and beat vigorously until the batter is smooth.

Gingerbread Waffles.

1-3 cup butter
1-3 cup boiling water
1-3 cup molasses
1-3 cup sugar
1 egg
1 cup flour
¼ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon soda
½ teaspoon baking powder
1 teaspoon ginger
½ teaspoon cinnamon

Place the butter in a large mixing bowl and pour the boiling water over it. When melted add molasses, sugar and unbeaten egg and stir until sugar has dissolved. Sift dry ingredients into the bowl and beat until smooth. The batter will be very thin.

Household Hints

Bacon, crisped and broken into small pieces and mixed with cream cheese, makes a delicious sandwich filling, especially when thin slices of buttered whole wheat bread are used.

Cream cheese flavored with a bit of onion or horseradish and wrapped cornucopia fashion in slices of dried beef makes an excellent hors d'oeuvre.

A wide rubber scraper is an aid when removing batter from a mixing bowl.

Never cut a Sally Lunn with a knife. It should be broken apart with a fork like a sponge cake.

In making quick breads collect all ingredients before starting to mix, handle baking powder doughs as little as possible.

To draw out the flavors of meat for broth start the cooking in cold water and bring very slowly to the boiling point.

Chives, mint, chervil, parsely and similar small greens may be minced and sprinkled over a green salad.

Cracklings are the pieces of fat meat after the lard has been rendered from the pork. They are eaten in most country dishes throughout the South.

Recipe Suggested For Prune Fritters

Appropriate With Ham or Pork and as Dessert.

If you like crunchy good things you will want to try this recipe for prune fritters. They are especially appropriate for the holiday season and can be served as an accompaniment for the fresh baked ham or crown roast of pork. Prepare them by the following recipe.

Prune Fritters.

1 cup flour
1½ teaspoons baking powder
Dash of cinnamon
Dash of salt
1 tablespoon sugar
1 egg, well beaten
½ cup milk
½ pound cooked and pitted prunes

Sift flour with baking powder, cinnamon, salt and sugar. Mix egg with milk and add slowly to flour mixture. Beat until batter is smooth. Dip prunes in batter and drop in deep hot fat (365 degrees to 375 degrees F.). Fry until golden brown. Drain on brown paper. Serves six.

Served with a rum or orange sauce these fritters also make a delicious dessert.

Four Unusual Kraut Recipes Are Presented

Vegetable Goes Well With Various Meats; Fine in Omelet Form.

IF sauerkraut is your weakness you will be intrigued with these unusual recipes. You can have your favorite vegetable several times during the week without repeating the same dish.

Brisket of Beef and Sauerkraut.

2½ to 3 pounds of brisket of beef (or plate beef).
1 large can of kraut or quart of bulk kraut.
2 or 3 medium sized onions.
Paprika.

Place meat in a baking dish and surround it with the kraut. Add just sufficient water to saturate the kraut well. Add onions and sprinkle with paprika to suit taste. Place in oven and bake slowly until meat is done—about two hours. This dish may be boiled instead of baked if desired. If boiled it may be treated the same as spareribs and sauerkraut.

Sauerkraut Roast.

2 cups sauerkraut
1 cup peanuts (or any other desired kind of nuts)
1 onion
1 cup tomato pulp or soup
1 cup grated cheese
1 cup bread or cracker crumbs
1 tablespoon salad oil or fat seasoning

Put nuts and onion through coarse knife or food chopper; combine with sauerkraut, tomato pulp, cheese and crumbs. Season to taste with salt, pepper and sage or other poultry seasoning. Moisten with water or tomato pulp. Shape in loaf, bake 30 minutes. Serve with tomato sauce.

Sauerkraut Omelet.

2 cups sauerkraut
¼ cup butter or other fat
1-3 cup flour
1 teaspoon salt
⅛ teaspoon paprika
¾ cup liquid (milk, water, soup stock, vegetable juice or a mixture of two or more of these)
4 eggs
1 teaspoon lemon juice

Melt butter or fat, add the flour and cook for about one minute. Add the milk, stirring constantly, and cook until the mixture is smooth and thick. Add the sauerkraut and egg yolks unbeaten. Beat the whites of the eggs stiff and fold them into the mixture. Add lemon juice; pour into a buttered omelet pan, cook in a slow oven for about 20 minutes; fold; serve immediately on a hot platter.

Pointers Given On Selection Of Yule Gifts

Interesting Suggestions Made for Shopping on a Limited Budget.

WHAT are you planning to do about Christmas gifts? If your budget is limited you will be especially interested in these ideas for Christmas gifts worked out by the Extension Service of the U. S. Department of Agriculture.

Many persons divide their Christmas obligations into such groups as family and relatives, friends remembered with gifts, friends remembered with cards and gifts to the less fortunate. The first group often has to be subdivided into children and adults, and some of the more distant relatives can be very properly shifted to the card list.

First comes the card list. If we start soon enough we can get up some original little card idea, even if our skill as an artist isn't very great. Stickers, cut-out silhouettes and stencils or traced outlines will decorate many a homemade card if time can be given to the task. Better still, write a short, newsy Christmas letter, on Christmas-y stationery—which may be a plain card simply decorated with a gummed sticker or a little sketch. A personal message, if it is sincere, is always appreciated by distant friends.

Jellies, Preserves and Pickles.

Next come the relatives and friends to be remembered with personal gifts. What about the jellies, preserves and pickles you put up last summer? Those who do not have the time or materials to make their own preserves are always pleased with kitchen contributions. Cookies, fruit cakes and homemade candies fall in the same general category, and fruit cakes are actually better if made early and stored. Or small plum puddings—just enough for two people.

Many rural women have also found that growing plants, seeds, bulbs, herbs for seasoning or perfume and bags of home-grown nuts are most acceptable to their friends. Extension workers list also, among more ambitious gifts made by rural women, hooked rugs, mats and chair seats, braided and rag rugs, hand woven scarfs, runners and bags, baskets of all kinds, gloves and tooled leather articles from home-grown hides, many useful articles made of native woods, and pottery from native clay. While extension teaching of these crafts has been primarily to help farm families increase their cash incomes and to develop hobbies, it is natural for the rural craftswomen to turn their skills to good account, both in remembering their own friends and relatives without spending much and in making articles for sale to Christmas shoppers.

Rural Handicrafts.

If you are a city dweller and have more cash than spare time, and want to surprise your friends with unusual gifts, now is the time to visit some of the handicraft centers maintained by rural women under extension encouragement where craft articles are displayed. Whatever you spend on such gifts will buy other much needed useful articles for the families of the makers, thus adding momentum to the industrial wheels, the factories where "consumers' goods" are being made.

A whole volume could be written on what not to choose for children's Christmas gifts. In general it might be said that the best selections are those which encourage the children to make or build something for themselves, that can be used over and over without loss of interest, and that are simple and suited to the ages of the children who will receive them.

Giving to the "less fortunate" has always been considered an important Christmas tradition. Perhaps a gift basket of useful food supplies will be more appreciated than anything else—a selection of staples like canned tomatoes, evaporated milk, canned salmon, dried beans, dried fruit, or a large bag of potatoes or a basket of fruit. Something by way of a treat—a box of home-baked cookies or some candy, would make a practical gift like this a little less obvious.

Grand Prizes Will Be Awarded In Recipe Contest This Week

Coffee Punch, White Fruit Cake and Boiled Banana Dressing Are Selected as Best Entries; Mrs. Sage Wins Salad Bowl.

THE three women whose recipes were selected in The Post's contest will receive the prizes in time to make good use of them during the pre-holiday as well as the holiday season.

Mrs. Charles O. Sage, 2139 Pennsylvania avenue northwest, is awarded first prize for coffee punch. The beautiful hand-carved salad bowl with matching serving fork and spoon which she will receive this week will make an excellent background for the ever-popular festive fruit and vegetable table decoration. The brilliant colors that trace the inside of the bowl are resistant to vinegar and other salad ingredients and will remain bright after constant usage.

The second prize, a combination cake server and box smartly styled of nontarnishing chromium and white porcelain decorated with dashing handles and knobs, is awarded Mrs. A. L. Aylesworth, 5 West Lincoln street, Buckannon, W. Va., for white fruit cake. The vivid coloring of the tray will make a fitting background for thin slices of Christmas fruit cake and decorated cookies.

Third Prize to Mrs. Waters.

Mrs. J. J. Waters, 5614 Third place northwest, won the third prize, a Dutch oven, for boiled banana dressing. The Dutch oven, which is used atop the range and occupies but a single burner, will be a constant joy during the pre-holiday baking, for while the large oven is in use for the Christmas baking, a custard, pie or small roast can be baked in the small oven atop the range.

The prize-winning recipes are printed below.

Coffee Punch.

Mixed together:
1 quart of black coffee
1 cup cream
¾ cup sugar

Freeze and then mix in one-half cup of brandy or rum and one-half pint of cream which has been whipped. Let stand in refrigerator for half an hour. Stir well before serving.

White Fruit Cake.

1½ cups granulated sugar
1 cup butter
2 tablespoons lemon juice
4 cups sifted flour
1 teaspoon baking powder
½ teaspoon soda
½ teaspoon salt
¼ pound orange peel
¼ lemon peel
10 egg whites
2 rings natural crystallized pineapple
2 rights red crystallized pineapple
2 rings green crystallized pineapple
¼ cup juice from canned white cherries
¼ cup juice from canned pineapple
½ pound red glazed cherries
1 pound almonds, blanched and chopped
½ pound very light colored citron
1 pound white seedless raisins
Wash raisins thoroughly and dry.

Finely chop all peels and fruits. Sift flour once before measuring and then add salt, baking powder and soda and sift three times. Carefully shake 1 cup of the flour over the prepared fruit and the chopped nuts. Sift sugar several times.

Cream the butter and add sugar a little at a time and cream thoroughly. Add lemon juice and beat well. Add pineapple juice and cherry juice alternately with the flour and beat well after each addition. Fold in the beaten egg whites and then the prepared fruit and nuts. Bake in a slow oven (250 degrees F.) for 2½ hours, then increase heat to 300 degrees F. and bake 30 minutes longer.

The success in making this cake lies in the baking of it. Line the pans with three of four thicknesses of white paper well greased and sift flour about ¼-inch thick over bottom of pans and then cover bottom with three or four thicknesses of well-greased paper. Cover top of pan with heavy paper until the last hour of baking so cake will not get too brown.

Boiled Banana Dressing.

1 teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon mustard
Pinch of cayenne pepper
2 teaspoons butter
2 teaspoons flour
1½ teaspoons sugar
1 egg
½ cup scalded milk
2 bananas
3 tablespoons vinegar.

Put dry ingredients together and stir them into the egg, slightly beaten. Put all the ingredients, except bananas and vinegar, in the top of a double boiler. Let them cook gently, stirring constantly, until they are thickened. Add the vinegar slowly and continue the cooking until the dressing is creamy. Whip in the bananas, which have been mashed and strained. Strain the dressing and cool. Beat with an egg beater until smooth. Whipped cream may be folded into this dressing just before serving. It is excellent when served with fruit salad and is especially attractive for children.

Add Curry to Meats.

In Indian and Ceylon, curry sauces are added to meat, fish and vegetable dishes on the slightest provocation. While we, in America, are not so fond of this condiment, a dash of curry powder will give zest to a sauce that tastes a bit flat. It is particularly suitable to recipes which consists of or at least include rice.

French Dressing Aid.

If French dessing is made before the meal, the addition of a small amount of egg white beaten with the dresing will make the emulsion more permanent.

Boy Patricide Freed Without Aid of Lawyer

Young Falin Fails to Go on Stand; 10 Witnesses Back Defense Plea.

By Virginia Lee Warren,
A Staff Correspondent.

Appalachia, Va., Dec. 9.—Sixteen-year-old Haugeman Falin, hill-bred Wise County lad, was freed of a charge of patricide in Judge J. T. Hamilton's court her today without having to take the stand.

Young Falin appeared without counsel to hear a few witnesses testify he had slain his father in self-defense when the latter, in a drunken frenzy, had attacked him for having failed to put water in the radiator of their car.

The boy was placed on probation for a year and was ordered to report monthly to a probation officer.

Ten Witnesses Called.

Ten witnesses took the stand, to be gently treated by Commonwealth's Attorney Fred B. Greear, who was the only lawyer appearing in the case. Each supported young Falin's contention he had slain his father in self-defense.

When arrested Haugeman told a story of battling against his father, a story which in some respects was similar to that told by Edith Maxwell, Wise County school teacher, now waiting an appeal from her 25-year sentence for killing her father with the high heel of a slipper. Both killings occurred in Wise County.

Dr. W. A. Baker, Big Gap physician, told of treating young Falin for a deep scalp wound while the boy was awaiting transfer to the Wise County Jail after the killing.

J. R. Taylor, Big Gap undertaker, testified the elder Falin had a pistol in his hand and whisky bottle in his pocket when the undertaker first viewed the body.

Mrs. Falin, tired-appearing mother of the boy, said the quarrel had grown out of trouble with the family car; that the father accused the lad of watering the motor, thus bringing about the failure of the engine.

Jess Mainous, a town sergeant, told the story he said young Falin told him: That the car broke down, the couple reached their home on foot and the old man hit the boy on the head with a gun and swore he would kill him.

"The boy got off the floor," the officer said he was told, "and got a double-barreled shotgun. Going from the room, he met the father. He had a pistol in his hand. The boy fired. The father fell."

Judge Hamilton asked young Haugeman if he wished to testify.

"I don't believe I do," the boy said.

Commonwealth Attorney Fred B. Greear made no recommendations to the court, which sat without a jury, and objected to none of the defense witnesses.

Meanwhile, pretty, black-haired Edith Maxwell waited in her cell in the jailhouse at Wise for the hearing Thursday on her request for a new trial. She has asked 76-year-old Judge H. A. W. Skeen, who sent her to jail to set aside the verdict.

Edith testified her father attacked her with a knife in his hands and seized her by the hair. She says she struck him in self-defense.

If she is denied another hearing, defense attorneys plan to carry their motion to the Court of Appeals.

Berlin Mayor Resigns; Was Held Pro-Jewish

Congressman and Son Go on Trial

ment charges, the $1,000 price was agreed on.

Ives, taking the stand shortly after a jury of ten men and two women had been selected, said he was approached at his Baltimore home in 1934 with a proposition that he give money for an appointment to West Point that he had coveted for years.

He did not have the money, he said, and negotiations were carried on for several days. His mother, Mrs. Mary Dudley Ives, also of Baltimore, said she had opened letters during her son's absence that tended to corroborate his story.

An array of legal talent was aligned on both sides. David A. Pine, chief assistant United States attorney, and Samuel F. Beach represented the Government, and Maj. Gen. Samuel T. Ansell and Col. E. S. Bailey represented Representative Hoeppel, while Samuel King, brother of United States Senator King, of Utah, and Kenneth M. Parkinson, a member of the District Boxing Commission, represented the son.

At George Washington University it was learned that a man named Trinastich had attended the school for three years.

U. S. Employes Unite to Assist Edith Maxwell

Fund for Mountain Girl's Murder Case Defense Goes to $584.83.

Thirty-eight Government employes banded together yesterday and contributed $10.10 to the Edith Maxwell Defense Fund and receipts for the day reached $24.10. This brings the total amount received by The Post for the defense of the Wise County school teacher to $584.83.

Among the letters sent with the contributions, all of which expressed a strong conviction that the mountain school teacher had been sentenced unjustly for what they termed the "self-defense killing of her drunken father," was the following typical sentiment:

"Following this case very closely through the columns of your newspaper, I feel that if the facts are stated correctly the entire community needs an education along the lines of justice. It seems too bad that the laws of God and Nature are interpreted for male and female so differently by those who choose to do so."

In a previous acknowledgement, The Post mistakenly credited a donation of $5 to G. Newmann. The donation was sent by the Independent Order of the Sons of Jonadab, of which Newmann is the grand chief.

Citizens Fight Federation's Stand on Reds

Kalorama Association Opposes Resolution on Communism.

Roberts Suggests Plan to Determine Federal Grant to District.

After heated discussion, the Kalorama Citizens Association last night went on record as opposing the federation's stand against the teaching of communism in the District taken at its meeting last Saturday and listened with interest to a plan by People's Counsel William A. Roberts of determining the Federal lump-sum contributed to the District.

With one member not voting the organization unanimously reindorsed its resolution, adopted last month and rejected Saturday by the federation, which stated that "the effective combating of communism requires such instruction as will neither arouse morbid curiosity or leave the students unprepared. "Knowledge," it said, "is better than ignorance."

Roberts suggested that a committee be appointed to estimate the value of real estate used by the Federal Government and also the increased expense caused the District by the fact that this is the Nation's Capital and use this estimate as the basis for the annual Federal allotment.

Group Split Averted

The pipe of peace was smoked at the meeting of the Congress Heights Citizens Association when J. L. Gelbman retracted his announcement, made at last month's meeting, that he would seek an injunction restraining the association from donating $125 to each of four churches in the community.

Gelbman said he made his decision after talking with the organization's new president, E. J. Read, who acted as peacemaker in a fight that threatened to split the association. Read announced that he was going to ask the four churches, which had received the money—the Congress Heights Baptist Church, the Congress Heights Methodist Church, Esther Memorial Episcopal Church and the Catholic Church of the Assumption—to give $25 each to the Congress Heights Parent-Teacher Association. Two have already agreed to do this, he said.

Hillcrest Citizens

Hillcrest Citizens Association voted to sponsor a community Christmas tree at Branch road and Alabama avenue southeast. President R. C. Darnell appointed J. J. MacGregor as chairman of the tree committee.

Darnell announced committee chairmanships, including James Reed, utilities; J. W. Strohman, streets; George W. Absher, sewers; Mrs. Charles Foster, police; Henry L. Grampp, schools; Mrs. George W. Absher, health; Mrs. O. R. Davidson, membership, and Charles Foster, MacGregor and himself as delegates to the Southeast Council.

Traffic Light Asked

Spurred by the injury of a 5-year-old boy at Pennsylvania avenue and Sixth street southeast yesterday, the Southeast Business Men's Association last night unanimously adopted a resolution asking for a traffic light there. Members recalled four deaths at that intersection in the past two years.

The organization also went on record as opposing the "teaching and advocating" of communism, at the same time stating that no educated person should be kept in ignorance of the subject. A resolution was adopted indorsing the plan of Commissioner Allen to ask that the District be given the right of referenda on civic affairs.

'Unfit' Literature Hit

Harry N. Stull, president of the Stanton Park Citizens Association, told the members that literature "unfit for adolescent pupils" was being sold near McKinley and Eastern high schools. The matter was referred to the association's committee on schools.

The committee on streets and sidewalks reported that a check had showed street cars on Eighth street northeast, were running behind schedule. In the belief that was caused by the one-man street car, the organization went on record opposing this.

Northeast Citizens

The Northeast Citizens Association referred to its executive committee a resolution to increase the local revenues by levies on liquor and cigarettes. The consensus was that the Federal Government should increase its annual appropriation to the District to a "just and reasonable" proportion.

The organization adopted a resolution to ask the Public Utilities Commission to consider the Washington Gas Light Co. and the Georgetown Gas Light Co. separately in setting the base rate for gas.

Group Elects Officers

The following officers were elected by the Park View Citizens Association: F. V. Hale, president; B. J. Kroger, vice president; John S. Cole, secretary; H. H. Moore, treasurer; Miss Emily Scrivener, Walter S. Beller, and Mrs. R. H. Prescott, executive committee members; F. S. Walker and F. E. Smith, delegates to the federation, and John S. Cole, delegate to the District Public School Association.

Case Workers Report Capital Poor Starving

Declare Funds Sufficient to Restore Relief Cut Allen Ordered.

Declaring enough funds were available to restore the 25 per cent ordered slashed from relief family budgets, some 50 case workers of the Public Assistance Division last night urged this theme upon Commissioner George E. Allen, District relief administrator:

"Gamble upon Congress to grant enough funds for the rest of the fiscal year, and we'll stand behind you."

The reason for the slash, the case workers said, was that Allen had divided up the funds evenly to last until July. They favored spending what was available to grant full relief now.

Although Allen has promised to rescind the cut, affecting 10,000 relief families, in January, slow starvation is already gripping some persons, the case workers declared at a meeting at the Red Cross Auditorium.

One office was reported to have received three letters from clinic doctors within a week, saying the relief patients sent them did not need medicine—"they need food."

The case workers adopted a three-point program—first, the restoration of the full relief budget at once; second, for supplementing of WPA wages where work relief wages are less than direct relief payments; third, for making dismissals of direct relief administrative personnel on a rating basis.

200 on Relief To Make City Traffic Study

White Collar Individuals Will Start Soon on Investigation.

Reduction of Accident Toll Is Aim; WPA to Stand Cost.

Two hundred "white-collar" individuals on relief will be assigned to traffic survey of Washington in the near future.

They will be paid out of $106,164 in Works Progress Administration funds, the expenditure of which has been approved for the purpose by President Roosevelt and Comptroller General J. R. McCarl.

The project was proposed by Commissioner George E. Allen, who was notified of its approval yesterday.

The 200 assigned to the project will conduct the most intensive study of traffic conditions in Washington since 1925, when an engineering firm made a survey here. Out of their work is expected to come a program that will make this a safer city for motorist and pedestrian alike.

The workers will be assigned to various parts of the city. They will make a count of automobiles passing intersections, and from their findings the Traffic Bureau will determine whether traffic lights are needed at intersections which have none and whether the timing of existing lights should be changed.

M. O. Eldridge, assistant traffic director, yesterday said he hopes the survey will be of great help in determining the causes of accidents here and pointing the way to a reduction in such accidents.

Lowengrub Pleads Not Guilty to Theft

Broker at Liberty on Bond Pending Larceny Trial.

Irving Lowengrub, broker, yesterday in the District Supreme Court entered a plea of not guilty to an indictment charging him with larceny and embezzlement. He was allowed to remain at liberty on bond pending his trial next month.

Lowengrub was indicted after a woman employe of his brokerage concern spectacularly committed suicide in an apartment house at Connecticut avenue and Rodman street northwest, when she turned on the gas, flooded the apartment with lethal fumes and then accidentally ignited them.

The resultant explosion tore out the side of the apartment and brought the fire rescue squad and police. A note she left in which she allegedly detailed operations of the concern was addressed to United States Attorney Leslie C. Garnett, who turned it over to the grand jury for investigation.

Boy, Hit on Trip To Santa, Dying

Cain stated, William pulled at his arm. He said he did not see or hear the street car until it was too late.

Physicians said William's condition was critical and they hold little hope for his recovery. Police did not hold McLearen.

Gerald Bennett, 51, of 917 Twelfth street northwest, was said to be critically hurt in Emergency Hospital yesterday after he was struck at Ninth street and New York avenue northwest.

Bennett suffered a fracture of the skull when hit, stepping off a loading platform. Linton Sims, 37, 1616 Vermont avenue northwest, driver of the car, was not held.

Lieut. George Grunert, 27, of F Troop, Third Cavalry, Fort Myer, Va., was seriously injured when two cars collided on the Baltimore boulevard near College Park, Md. Grunert was taken to Walter Reed Hospital, where it was said his skull is fractured.

Group Backs Marshall For Postmaster Here

Friends of Insurance Dealer Organize Movement as Farley Remains Silent as to His Nominee For Successor to Mooney in February.

An organized movement for appointment of Rowland S. Marshall, local insurance dealer, as postmaster here has been inaugurated by his friends, it was learned yesterday.

Postmaster General Farley remained silent concerning the identity of the man he will propose to President Roosevelt to succeed Postmaster William M. Mooney, whose term expires February 5.

Marshall, general agent of the Union Labor Life Insurance Co., with offices in the Machinist Building, is not among those who have applied for the office.

His friends, however, were reported to have obtained indorsements from numerous persons of political prominence here, including several members of the National Democratic Council.

Marshall declined to give any information about the activities of those working in his behalf.

Reports that Mooney might be succeeded by someone from the ranks at the postoffice were discounted in authoritative quarters.

Others mentioned recently as possibilities for the job included Merritt O. Chance, a former postmaster here; Malcolm S. McConihe, member of the District of Columbia-Virginia Boundary Commission, and Allen Rowe, an Ohio insurance agent boo-agent backed by Representative Lamneck, of Ohio.

A one-year residence requirement has been set by executive order. The office pays $9,000 a year.

19 Is Crime's Danger Age, Says U. S. Prison Bureau Director

Nineteen is the danger age for crime, Sanford Bates, director of the United States Bureau of Prisons, told the Federal Bar Association at the University Club last night.

Speaking generally, boys and girls leave school at the age of 18 and they begin to settle down in jobs or matrimony shortly after 20. Department of Justice records, Bates said, show crime to be at its peak in age brackets midway between those years.

"No question about it," he said. "Nineteen is the danger age, and we should shape our environment to fit it."

Testimony of other speakers discussing youth and crime tended to agree, including that of Justin Miller, association president and special assistant to the Attorney General; Thomas Gillespie Walsh, assistant corporation counsel of the District, and Gordon Dean, of the Department of Justice's criminal division.

More attention to juvenile courts and introduction of expert personnel was one suggestion. Walsh praised the District's program of recreation development. Dean blamed a tradition of lawlessness and moving pictures that glorify crime as two causes, and Bates added the suggestion that youths want to stand out among their fellows in some way. Miller said young persons need emotional and physical outlets.

All the speakers said Civilian Conservation camps were helping reduce juvenile delinquency, and Robert Fechner, director of emergency conservation work, outlining camp activities, said State law enforcement agencies of Florida, Virginia, Massachusetts and Wisconsin had credited the CCC program with cutting such delinquency in their States.

1,500-Pound 'Monocle' Here For Carnegie Institution Show

It could serve for either of two purposes, the 1,500-pound circular mass of glass that was set in place at the Carnegie Institution yesterday after about three hours of arduous labor, namely:

As a monocle for a Brobdingnagian or as an auxiliary disc for the new 200-inch telescope being built for Mount Wilson Observatory.

It happens that the gigantic glass eye will fill the latter role. Small it may be, in comparison with the 20-ton, 17-feet-in-diameter reflector of the projected telescope, but just the same this auxiliary mirror bids fair to "steal" the Carnegie Institution's annual show which opens next Saturday.

Sixty inches in diameter and about 11 inches thick, it arrived here yesterday by truck from the Corning (N. Y.) Glass Works, birthplace also of its bigger brother. The latter took a year to cool, this one a mere three months. Both are made of pyrex glass.

Like the 200-inch disc, the one to be exhibited here is smooth on one side and ribbed on the other. The ribbing, which forms an attractive geometric pattern, is an expedient to save weight.

The "eye" isn't quite finished, having just come out of the mold. After the three-day exhibition, it will go back to Corning to be ground and polished. The desired curvature having been obtained, from which it should not deviate more than one-half millionth of an inch, the smooth side will receive a coat of reflecting metal. That will make it a powerful mirror.

Average User Held Slighted By Gas Plan

Keech Suggests Greater Cuts Be Given to the Small Consumer.

P. U. C. Finishes Hearing on Rates; Decision Due This Week.

A suggestion that the smaller consumers be given a greater proportion of the $305,000 rate reduction proposed by the Washington & Georgetown Gas Light companies was made yesterday by Richmond B. Keech, vice chairman of the Public Utilities Commission.

His suggestion came as hearings on the rate reduction proposal were brought to a close by the Public Utilities Commission. A decision on the proposed reduction, which would be effected under a sliding scale arrangement, is expected toward the end of this week.

Exhibits submitted yesterday by attorneys for the gas light companies showed that, of the proposed reduction of $305,000, the sum of $167,000 would be applied to bills of domestic consumers, $80,000 to bills for home heating and the remainder to bills of commercial consumers—hotels, office buildings and the like.

Four Types Listed.

The domestic consumers are divided into four blocks. These, together with the proposed reductions, follow:

Householders using up to 800 cubic feet of gas a month, no reduction; those using between 900 to 4,000 feet, $19,774; those using between 4,100 and 10,000 feet, $63,907, and those using more than 10,000 feet, $80,155.

There are 20,000 consumers in the first block, 59,000 in the second, 27,000 in the third and 5,700 in the fourth.

Keech estimated that the average gas bill, based on all classes of consumption, was for consumption of 4,500 cubic feet a month.

Why, he wanted to know at yesterday's hearing, were not the 27,000 consumers in the third block—4,100 to 10,000 cubic feet a month—given more consideration than the 5,700 in the fourth block?

Why, he wanted to know, should a reduction of $80,155 be given to the smaller group and only $63,907 to the average consumers?

The lawyers for the gas companies said the plan they had presented was the best they could devise, and frankly admitted that the plan was aimed at encouraging the heavy consumers to continue using gas and using more of it. Hence the larger reductions for those using 10,500 cubic feet or more.

The companies expect the new rates to increase consumption by 10 per cent.

At the conclusion of yesterday's hearing it was indicated that the PUC would order some changes in the rate reduction scheme before approving it.

Baskets Shown Today.

Sixty Christmas baskets, made by students of McKinley Technical High School, will go on exhibition at the school today, as teachers prepare to judge them for prizes.

Company Adds 6,000 Numbers To Phone Book

Henry L. Only Roosevelt Listed; H. R. Zwoyer Is 'Anchor Man.'

The 1935-36 telephone book made its appearance yesterday, jacketed in gray and bulging with fully 6,000 more listings than its green-covered predecessor, according to the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co.

About 206,000 copies will be distributed, each of which carries the name of but one Roosevelt (Col. Henry L., Assistant Secretary of the Navy. But you can get the President—or at least, his house phone—by calling National 1414).

The new edition contains 1,168 pages. The honor of being anchor man in the subscriber section goes this time to Harry R. Zwoyer. (He displaces Leo F. Zwissler.)

There are 456 pages of classified listings, boasts the C. & P., which now puts "painter" after the name of one subscriber, Frank Knox.

Since the first of the year there has been a gain of 6,800 telephones in the Capital.

Finally, reminds the C. & P., don't forget to go through your old directories before discarding them. Of course, that won't be necessary if you don't make the books repositories for insurance policies, bank books, birth certificates, leases and even currency.

Many subscribers do, and some of them absentmindedly toss out their valuables along with the numbers when the new book is delivered.

Night Students' Junior College Survey Started

School officials took the first step to possible creation of a junior college for night students yesterday. To all night-school students last night, they issued questionnaries asking whether the students would be interested "in studies above the high school level."

They also asked for suggested additions to the present night-school courses of study and, as the last of 16 questions, put the issue of cost:

"Would you be willing to pay for such studies above high school level providing such cost amounts to not more than $12 per subject per year."

Simultaneously it was learned that the first issue of the night-school paper, the Owl, to appear tomorrow, would advocate a junior college. Students of Hine Night School yesterday named a committee to work for the project, including Otto J. Dekon, chairman; Mrs. Milton Smith, secretary, and Maurice Guervitz, Theodore Gossett and Miss Eve Fero.

Faster Service Planned; Many of Revisions in Southeast.

Chevy Chase Route to Be Continued Up to Sixth Street.

A number of bus routes were ordered revised yesterday by the Public Utilities Commission, and as a result of the changes, to go into effect December 15, better service is in prospect, particularly in Southeast Washington.

Improved service in the Southeast was requested by the Randle Highlands Citizens Association, and granted by the Capital Transit Co., which owns the lines affected.

The East Washington bus line now has its terminus at Seventeenth street and Pennsylvania avenue southeast. Passengers transfer there for points across the Pennsylvania Avenue Bridge. After December 15, a transfer will not be necessary. The line will be extended across the bridge to Twenty-fifth street and Pennsylvania avenue. From there the busses will travel to Naylor road and thence back to the avenue. A 15-minute schedule will be maintained.

The South Washington bus line also has its terminus now at Seventeenth street and Pennsylvania avenue southeast. After December 15, the line will be extended to Pennsylvania avenue and Minnesota avenue, the buses operating under the same 15-minute headway.

From Pennsylvania avenue and Minnesota avenue, two spur lines will be operated. One will carry passengers to and from Hillcrest at 30-minute intervals, and the other to and from Ely in North Randle Highlands on the same schedule.

From North Randle Highlands buses will travel to Kenilworth Junction, Benning, on an hourly schedule.

The Anacostia-Congress Heights line will be expanded to include four trips a day to Bolling Field, thus providing service for soldiers at the field, members of their families, and also for the WPA workers now employed there.

At present certain buses of the Chevy Chase line now stop during rush hours at Twentieth street and Constitution avenue. The P. U. C. ordered yesterday that these buses continue on to Sixth street and Constitution avenue. As a result of the change the buses will carry Government employes all the way through the Federal triangle.

National Judgment Is Approximately Unanimous on Filmdom's "Best of Month"

PreviewGroups Nominate Hits 'Approved Here

Report Through Will Hays; 'Time' Marches Today; Amusement Chat.

By Nelson B. Bell.

The West and East Coast preview committees reporting their evaluations of current film releases through the office of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., the Will H. Hays' organization, seem to have made unusually worthy selections of pictures to be honored with classification as "best of the month."

These subjects, as announced in the Hays' brochure, just to hand, bringing the committees' findings down to December 1, 1935, include "Ah, Wilderness," "Annie Oakley," "A Tale of Two Cities," "Metropolitan," "Mutiny on the Bounty," "Peter Ibbetson," "Rendezvous," "So Red the Rose" and "Transatlantic Tunnel."

Of these nine, Washington has seen seven. With one or two exceptions, the seven were approved by both press and public as pictures well worth the time and money of discriminating theatergoers. None was condemned as a screen play of such inferior merit as to warrant a condemnatory and complete public indifference.

Thus, in the large view, the national preview committees and the National Capital are in consonance in their judgment of the recent output of the studios.

Two Yet to Come."

For this reason it seems of interest to set down excerpts, at least, of the appraisals the committees have bestowed upon the two of the "best of the month" that Washington has not seen, but probably will soon—"Ah, Wilderness," and "A Tale of Two Cities."

"Ah, Wilderness," of course, is Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's picturization of the Eugene O'Neill nostalgic comedy-drama of adolescence, directed by Clarence Brown with Wallace Beery, Lionel Barrymore, Eric Linden, Alince MacMahon, Cecilia Parker and Spring Byington in the principal roles.

There has been some question concerning the screen propriety of certain scenes in the play ever since the late Will Rogers hesitated about accepting the part of the understanding father, portrayed on the stage by George M. Cohan. In view of this circumstance, it seems pertinent to reproduce en toto the comment published in the Hayes pamphlet, to wit:

"Eugene O'Neill's play comes to the screen with a wealth of atmospheric detail which recreates a New England village of 1906, when 9 o'clock was late and 12 o'clock the middle of the night. 'A comedy of recollections' emanating from a family group of that day, a family which has as one of its members a very young man with a passion for the poems of Swinburne, Wilde and Omar Khayyam. The part of the bibulous uncle, as played by Wallace Beery, over-intrudes upon the major theme of the story, which concerns the relationship of father and son. Good direction transfers the mood of a bygone day to the screen with consummate skill. Realistic characterization is contributed by each member of an outstanding cast. While the humor of the picture will be enjoyed by the whole family, the underlying psychology will have more appeal to adults. The Daughters of the American Revolution regard this as adult entertainment."

M.-G.-M. Scores Again.

It happens that "A Tale of Two Cities" also is an M.-G.-M. production, based, needless to say, on the Charles Dickens novel, and directed by Jack Conway. The cast is headed by Ronald Colman and includes, among others, Elizabeth Allan, Edna May Oliver, Reginald Owen, Basil Rathbone, Blanche Yurka, Henry B. Walthall, Donald Woods, former leading man of the National Theater Players, H. B. Warner and Walter Catlett.

The report on this one is as follows:

"Once again M.-G.-M. has transmitted to the screen a Dickens classic retaining, with authenticity, the story and maintaining throughout the beauty and interest of the original. A notable and a capable cast serves as a fitting background for Ronald Colman's unforgettable portrayal of Sydney Carton. There is every evidence of deep research in the planning for the stage setting of early Paris and London, as one is transported into the unhappy days of the French Revolution with its starving people, cruel executions and savage revenge. Finished, expert, realistic direction, very fine photography, sustained suspense, all add to the interest. Outstanding are both court-room scenes and the ending is beautifully conceived. Excellent for the family, but not for small children."

According to present booking plans, "A Tale of Two Cities" is expected to be the first January attraction on the screen of Loew's Palace Theater. It seems to be something worth waiting for.

And never use a preposition to end a sentence with!

As an addendum to the announcement that "Seven Keys to Baldpate" will open in his opera house today, Manager Hardie Meakin of RKO-Keith's sends along lengthy sereeds, melts the wires with telegrams and burns out the drama desk phone in his anxiety to make known also that as a companion attraction the ninth issue of "The March of Time," prereleased four days for that specific purpose, will be included in the new bill. A special print is being rushed here by air express in time, it is hoped, to make the first show scheduled for this morning.

Three items of timely interest are made the subject matter of the new "Time:" Dr. Francis Townsend and his old-age pension scheme—a matter that is said to be causing the Administration and its campaign advisers a mild attack of the jitters; Manchukuo and the Chino-Japanese crisis in North China and the U. S. Secret Service and Coast Guard, as they join forces in a battle against a sinister narcotic smuggling ring.

For those who are interested—and 20,000,000 citizens of the United States already are known to be—Dr. Townsend, retired California physician, explains his plan and tells how it is devised to restore America to complete economic health.

Light Fantastic of 1920.

The "Toddle," the "Camel Walk" and the "Whirlwind One-Step," it seems, were the last few words in dance steps back in 1920.

To go back not quite that far, somebody in the audience may remember that last Wednesday this column asked, on behalf of the practically frantic Columbia Players, if anyone might recall what were the most popular dance steps of 15 years ago. A popular dance of that period has to be done as a part of the action in "Inheritors," to be presented in Pierce Hall by the Columbians on Wednesday and Thursday nights, Dec. 18 and 19.

Several of the Capital's best remembrers provided the consensus from which the three steps named above were derived. One of them will be seen in the play. Which one, as I understand it, has not yet quite been decided, but odds seem a trifle stacked against the "Camel Walk." Miss Mabel A. Hunt furnished the Columbians with perhaps the most succinct description of the first two named.

"Toddle: That quaint little rhythmical bouncing, whereby we could dance all night on a dime and still have 9 cents left."

"Camel Walk: In which the partners swayed backward and forward, as one, from the waist with each step, imitating the bobbing of the camel's head on his long neck as he strode along."

A little redundantly, Miss Hunt adds, "it was somewhat difficult to do with grace and ease."

Mr. F. Hammond, another with a memory who seems to have been one of the gay dogs of the 1919-1920 era, qualifies as an expert on that "Whirlwind One-Step" business.

"Good dancers," says he, "would pivot the entire floor at whirlwind speed. Men were real leaders in those days and, no matter how fast and furious the dance, there seemed to be few collisions."

Having been the first to respond to this column's plea for information, Miss Hunt has been forwarded two tickets for the December 18 performance. Mr. Hammond, the second in the running, was so helpful that he, too, has been mailed a pair.

Other tickets, neither "Annie Oakley's" nor to be put on the cuff, are on sale at the Willard Ticket Bureau.

New Players in an Old Favorite

When the fourth filmization of George M. Cohan's mystery-comedy of "Seven Keys to Baldpate," adapted from the Earl Derr Biggers story—there have been two silent screen versions and the present will make two "talkies"—opens on the screen at the RKO-Keith Theater today, the principal roles will be played by Gene Raymond and Margaret Callahan. The platinum Mr. Raymond and the slightly startled Miss Callahan are pictured above in one of the tenser moments of this amusing thriller, with its locale in a "deserted" mountain lodge.

'Scandals' Has Opulent Skits Of Racy Sort

Musical at National Is a Hit With First Crowd of the Week.

By Nelson B. Bell.

"SCANDALS." George White presents the twelfth edition of his famous revue in two acts and 25 scenes, with music and lyrics by Ray Henderson and Jack Yellen; dialogue by George White, William K. Wells and Howard A. Shiebler and dances by Russell Markert. Settings by Russell Patterson and Walter Jagemann; costumes created by Charles LeMaire.

THE CAST.

Rudy Vallee, Bert Lahr, Willie and Eugene Howard, Cliff "Ukulele Ike" Edwards, Gracie Barrie, Jane Cooper, Hal Forde, Estelle Jayne, Shea and Raymond, Sam, Ted Ray, Lois Eckhart, Harold Willard, Helene Miller, Peggy Moseley, Richard Lane, Claire McQuillen, Jean Gale, the Three Wiere Brothers and beauty chorus.

Fast, flashy, funny, sometimes offensively suggestive and Rabelaisian, full of catchy tunes and alive with beautiful women, George White's new "Scandals" is gaited to the point of view and the tempo of Forty-second street, in New York, and the New Amsterdam Theater.

It has color, pace and an army of clever principals, singers, dancers and specialists. It has skits that are clever, skits that are stupid and skits that are so daring that one wonders how Mr. White had the temerity to put them on. The longer they are, the dirtier, seems to have been the formula.

Presented in two acts, this twelfth of the "Scandals" races through a cyclonic first half to slow down appreciably in the second.

This would seem to be a fault that might easily be corrected, since there are talents in the company's personnel that are made little, if any, use of as the revue is routined at present—notably Rudy Vallee's Willie and Eugene Howard's and Harold Willard's. Mr. Willard being a barytone with a voice of splendid quality, range and power, to whom only one song is allotted.

The First Act's Peaks.

The high points in that rousing first act seemed to me to be "Life Begins at Sweet Sixteen," the first of Gracie Barrie's string of personal triumphs and one of the most gorgeous "girl scenes" Mr. White ever has conceived, which launches itself as an expansive cutaneous display and then modestly converts itself into a graceful, long-skirted—a little diaphanous, to be sure—choral; "Cigarette," the one song sung by Mr. Willard, which also transforms itself into an ensemble of striking brilliance in costuming, lighting and posturing; Jane Cooper's solo tap dance and her later "Truckin' in My Tails," in which the chorus also participated; "Selassie and His Army," a show-stopping interlude of extraordinary "hoofing" by Sam, Ted and Ray, three colored dancers, who are, as Georgie White remarked during intermission, "terrific," and "Brother Sublime and His Pied Piper of Harlem," sung by Rudy Vallee in blackface, as the cumulative finale of the first act, eventually engaging the activities of the entire troupe.

The two most brazenly amusing sketches in the first act are "A Blessed Event," played by Bert Lahr, Hal Forde and Richard Lane, and "Mind Over Matter," with Lahr, Ford, Claire McQuillen and Estelle Jaynes. They are packed with laughs and dynamite—for those of sensitive nature, only the latter.

After That Entr'acte Smoke.

Following the intermission, the customers are permitted to subside slightly from the high tension of the earlier portion of the gaucheries, but still are inspired to occasional tumults by such items as "The Buxom Mrs. Bascom," a rowdy roundelay, executed in their best white-tie-and-tails manner by Cliff "Ukulele Ike" Edwards, at the piano, and Bert Lahr, as a vocalist; "May I Have My Gloves," sung by Vallee in a strictly lackadaisical manner, which later converts itself into another of Mr. White's sumptuous "girl numbers," in which the shapely ladies of the ensemble seem to be wearing nothing but red, elbow-length gloves and a few shadows cast by unfortunately placed objects off-stage; "Chrysanthemum Gardens," in which Gracie Barrie gets right up there beside Nora Bayes, Sophie Tucker and all the other singing stars back to Maude Raymond and Clarice Vance, in a florid little thing called, "I've Got to Get Hot;" the Stanley Twin's "Shadow Dance," the greatest precision number on the boards; Lahr's hilarious low comedy—and it is very low—in "Soup," and the television finale, "The Year 2036."

The Three Wiere Brothers should be mentioned in here somewhere for their expert acrobatic clowning, and a word should be said for Willie and Eugene Howard's "Operatic Moment," an oft-repeated hit of theirs through the years, that ought to be reasonably embarrassing to one of their feminine associates in the burlesque arias from favorite grand operas.

Another "Show-Stopper."

It is unusual that two male trios should be the revue's sure-fire show-stoppers, but that was the case last night with the sepia team already mentioned and again by the Wieres.

One of the most amazing—and most gratifying—of the "Scandals'" revelations is the tremendous expansion that has overtaken Gracie Barrie's ingratiating and always ample artistry. Everything Gracie did last night bespoke a flowering talent of limitless possibilities and won her a virtual ovation.

Far greater utilization should be made of the now idle abilities of Rudy Vallee, who walks casually through a few simple songs and last evening did not even participate in the finale; Cliff Edwards, the Howards and Harold Willard. The television idea upon which the form of presentation is based is so flexible as to permit any sort of variation or readjustment. Incidentally, the cheapness of appearance of the tuning dials presided over by two charming young women, Ann Laxton and Verna Long, are out of all keeping with the opulence of the rest of the production.

And, incidentally again, there might be just one serious number—song or dance, or both—to break the monotony of the two acts' incessant insistence on broken-rhythm jazz tunes and dances.

I doubt if this edition ever will take rank with the best of the George White "Scandals" in completely rounded perfection, but it is now infinitely better, brighter and gayer entertainment than it was when it opened in Richmond. By the time it gets through Brooklyn into the New Amsterdam, it no doubt will be welcomed in New York, just as it was here last night as a rich, rare and racy specimen of a type of stage diversion that are few and far between these days.

Pat O'Brien, popular film star, who will be seen on both screen and stage at the Earle Theater for the week beginning Friday, is expected to arrive in this city tomorrow evening.

It is already being bruited about that some very elegant partying will be done in his honor by the local Warner executives on Thursday afternoon.

This is news of the most disquieting sort. A lot of us are not over the Ed Sullivan rout yet!

And a week after Mr. O'Brien, will arrive that eminent young songstress, Jane Froman, also to make personal appearances on the Earle stage. She is in "Stars Over Broadway," along with the O'Brien, Frank McHugh, Jimmy Melton, et al., but misses the duality of screen and stage by an eyelash.

A pretty long eyelash, maybe, but that's the kind these screen actresses have!

Palpitation-of-Heart Note.

Rudy Vallee, just arrived in town to join George White's "Scandals," attended the 7 o'clock performance at the Earle Theater Sunday night. The levee he held seems to point to the flower of Washington's young womanhood's clustering around the stage entrance to the National all this week.

Yeah, just a lot of Lilies of the Vallee, as you might say!

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Trinity Lutheran congregation presents Edward Rechlin in an organ recital in Universalist National Memorial Church, commemorating the 250th anniversary of Johann Sebastian Bach. Program: Prelude and Fugue (Walther), "Jesus, Priceless Treasure" (Walther), Sonatine (Ritter), Chorale (Krebs), Toccata (Buxtehude), Improvisation on Christmas carols (Rechlin), "Komm, Heiliger Geist," "Christ, unser Herr, zum Jordan kam," Fantasia and Fugue in A minor (Bach).

Greater celebrations have honored the name of Bach in this commemorative year, but none could have pleased the simple nature of Johann Sebastian more than the quiet period spent last night by those who assembled to hear Edward Rechlin. No applause intruded upon the spirit of communion that bound the organist and his auditors together in a common sympathy with the ideals and aspirations of a great master and with the reverence of a vanished epoch. The entire atmosphere of the recital was one of peace and meditation.

The program would have pleased Bach, for it associated with him composers who were his friends in life. It is possible that he may have known Ritter, about whom we possess very little knowledge and of whose works only the charming sonatine, at once so archaic and so modern, has survived. Certainly he was warmly attached to the others. To hear Dietrich Buxtehude play the "Abendmusiken" in the Marienkirche of Luebeck he walked 50 miles, and, having heard him, was so struck with admiration that he remained to study with him, extending his month's leave of absence to three, and thereby incurring severe reprimand.

Johann G. Walther, town organist in Weimar, was a relation of Bach on the maternal side and a close friend for many years. Johann Ludwig Krebs was one of his favorite pupils, and in the lovely chorale which was heard last night the spiritual influence of Bach is plainly discernible.

Mr. Rechlin demonstrated in his treatment of these composers a sincere musicianship of the intuitionally sensitive type. His registrations were remarkable for their evocation of the essential beauty of organ tone. There is in him nothing of the spectacular virtuoso, although his mastery of the console is obvious, for what concerns him is the playing of music in the spirit with which it was written.

Rarely calling upon the full resources of the instrument, and then only when the climactic nature of the pasage calls for power, he utilizes the softer tonal combinations with the skill of one devoted to the spirituality of music. His recital was in the truest sense a service not only to the memory of Bach, but also to the abiding truth that music on its highest plane is the language of the soul.

With Shirley Povich

En Route to Chicago, Dec. 9.

ROGERS (TRADER) HORNSBY, shrewd manipulator of player-flesh for the St. Louis Browns, has come along in recent years to challenge Clark Griffith's reputation as the champion David Harum of the big leagues. But on a basis of lifetime performances, the silver-thatched owner of the Nats still is tops.

POVICH.

Chugging along tonight toward Chicago in company with Griffith, this department has become strikingly aware of the fact that here is a man whose presence at the trading sessions that open tomorrow is a guarantee that the Washington club probably will be more ably represented than any other club in either league. Any deals that Griffith may make will be founded on a trading experience acquired through a period of 36 years in attendance at such conclaves.

Griffith is the lone survivor of that little coterie of baseball men who founded the American League at Chicago in 1900. Only Connie Mack, among the others, is still active in baseball. The Nats' owner takes pardonable pride in the fact that he alone, of all the 16 big league presidents, arose from the ranks of the players. He chuckles in telling the story of some of the others and particularly of the late Barney Dreyfuss, owner of the Pittsburgh Pirates, of whom it was said: "Thirty years in baseball, and he never threw a baseball."

Griffith did not come by his sobriquet of "The Old Fox" innocently. In the dim, dark days of the league he established his willingness to trade players freely and it was his habit of gaining the best of the bargain that won for him his title as baseball's David Harum. He counts as unprofitable only two deals among the hundred he has has made.

Those were the deals for Buddy Myer in 1927 and Dick Coffman in 1932. Myer he traded, at Bucky Harris' insistence, to the Red Sox for Shortstop Topper Rigney in an even swap. Coffman he bought from the Browns at a cost of $25,000 cash that proved a complete loss.

It was when Tris Speaker was Bucky Harris' first lieutenant in 1927 that the Myer deal was made. After the loss of the pennants they had won in 1924 and 1925, Speaker convinced Harris that the presence of Rigney would give the Nats another pennant winner and the deal was made—to Griffith's sorrow.

Two years later Griffith was forced to give up $80,000 worth of ball players to regain Myer from Boston. But that was one of his canniest deals. The five players he sent to the Red Sox did indeed cost him $80,000, but none of 'em was of much account.

To the everlasting credit of Griffith were his deals in the winter of 1932 that brought the Nats the pennant in 1933. Before journeying to the trading sessions, he outlined with Manager Joe Cronin the group of players whom he thought would win the pennant for the Nats if they could be obtained. In each case he was successful, and in the acquisition of Pitchers Earl Whitehill, Walter Stewart and Jack Russell and Outfielders Goose Goslin and Fred Schulte the Nats literally found the pennant.

As a result of his shrewdness, rival owners are not eager to do business with Griffith, notably Connie Mack and Jake Ruppert. Griffith has not made a trade with either the Athletics or the Yankees since 1921, when he engineered the three-cornered deal that brought Roger Peckinpaugh to Washington, sent Outfielders Bing Miller and Acosta to Philadelphia, a bundle of cash to Boston, and Third Baseman Joe Dugan to the Yankees.

Griffith said tonight that he would doubtless be approached by the New York Yankees concerning a trade that would bring the Yanks either Buddy Myer or Jake Powell, or both. He says he always has a stock method for stopping that kind of negotiations. "Sure, I'll trade," he'll tell the Yankees, "if you toss in Lou Gehrig."

The trick in putting across a deal is in refraining from making the first overtures, according to Griffith. If a club owner can get himself invited to a trading conference, then he has a distinct advantage. Any time he opens the negotiations, he goes into the conference with two figurative strikes against him.

The old gentleman is in desperate need of pitchers this year. His hand is already tipped off; but, unless he has cured the habits of a lifetime, he'll talk everything but pitchers at Chicago until some club owner makes the opening Griffith has been waiting for. Then Griff will back into a trade.

Rockne Trophy Will Be Given To S. M. U.

By the Associated Press.

CHAMPAIGN, Ill., Dec. 9.—Southern Methodist University, which meets Stanford in the annual Rose Bowl game at Pasadena, Calif., New Year's Day, today was ranked as national collegiate football champion under the rating system originated by Dr. Frank G. Dickinson, of the University of Illinois.

Southern Methodist, the first Southwestern team to finish at the head of the Dickinson rating, will receive the Knute K. Rockne Memorial Intercollegiate Football Trophy.

The Mustangs gained a point rating of 28.01 to beat out Minnesota, winner of the trophy last year. The Gophers had 27.35, with Princeton, the East's outstanding eleven, third with 26.00. Louisiana State University was fourth with 24.03, and Stanford was tied with California for fifth at 23.11.

The championship rating went to a team not a member of the highest ranking conference or section under the system for the first time. The Big Ten was rated as the most powerful group with a "plus" 3.78 score. The Southwestern Conference was second with "plus" 3.31. Other sections and conferences had "minus" ratings as follows: East, 0.00; Pacific Coast, 0.11; Southeast, 0.12; Big Six, 1.95; Southern, 6.15.

The ratings:

	W.	L.	T.	Pts.
Southern Methodist	12	0	0	28.01
Minnesota	8	0	0	27.35
Princeton	9	0	0	26.00
Louisiana State	9	1	1	24.03
Stanford	7	1	0	23.11
California	9	1	1	23.11
Ohio State	7	1	0	22.21
Texas Christian	10	1	0	22.01
Notre Dame	7	1	1	21.66
California (Los Angeles)	6	2	0	21.25
Fordham	6	1	2	20.89

One revision in the final standings is possible, according to Dr. Dickinson. If St. Mary's defeats U. C. L. A. Saturday, Fordham will move up to tenth position and Northwestern will rank eleventh with 20.21 points.

Previous winners of the title under the system, in order starting with 1924: Notre Dame, Dartmouth, Stanford, Illinois, Southern California, Notre Dame, Notre Dame, Southern California, Michigan, Michigan and Minnesota.

Carnera K. O. Victor Over Brackey

By the Associated Press.

BUFFALO, N. Y., Dec. 9.—Primo Carnera, bulky Italian heavyweight contender, knocked out George (Big Boy) Brackey, of Buffalo, in the fourth round of their scheduled ten-rounder tonight. Carnera weighed 260½ and Brackey 208.

The finish came after one minute and six seconds of the fourth.

Carnera, flailing with both hands, sent Brackey down for counts of seven and nine before connecting with the knockout punch, a right to the chin.

The fight began with the 21-year-old Brackey, heavyweight hope of Buffalo, setting the pace and meeting his ponderous opponent toe to toe for the first round.

Brackey is Floored.

Carnera, grinning amiably, stepped out in the second and began to straighten up the youngster with right uppercuts. Brackey took a nine count shortly after the round opened but was swapping punches with Primo at the bell.

Brackey stepped into a shower of rights and lefts in the third and was down five times, mostly for nine counts. The bell saved him.

The Italian went to work in earnest in the final round, floored Brackey as he stepped from his corner and then sent him down for nine. A left to the chin straightened up Big Boy and a powerhouse right to the same spot ended the fight.

A. A. U. Member Quits After Olympic Vote

New York, Dec. 9 (AP).—Harry D. Henshel, veteran member of the American Olympic basketball committee, today announced his resignation because of the Amateur Athletic union's decision to compete in the Olympic games at Berlin next year.

"I cannot conscientiously continue to serve as a member of the committee so long as it has been decided that next year's games actually will be held in Nazi Germany," Henshel said in a telegram addressed to Avery Brundage, president of the American Olympic committee.

Lie Is Passed In Olympic Dispute

Claim $1,000,000 Was Available in Fight Is Challenged.

Mahoney Denies He Sent Propaganda; Brundage Charges 'Packing.'

By Alan Gould,

Associated Press Sports Editor.

NEW YORK, Dec. 9.—Fresh broadsides today from the rival athletic camps, marked by charges and counter-charges of "bad faith" dispelled any lingering prospect that the fight over the issue of American participation in the 1936 Olympics in Germany was checked by the Amateur Athletic Union's decision to be fully represented in the games.

The verdict is final so far as American athletes are concerned. They will be sent abroad to compete with the rest of the world with A. A. U. sanction on all Olympic fronts. There is no armistice in sight otherwise. To the contrary it appeared not only that foes of American participation would continue their fight, lost on the floor of the A. A. U. convention, but that they would resist all fund-raising plans of the American Olympic committee.

Conceding that his opposition can "hamstring" the campaign designed to raise upward of $300,000 to send between 400 and 500 American athletes to Germany, Avery Brundage, of Chicago, newly elected president of the A. A. U. as well as president of the A. O. C., predicted the funds would be raised "somehow."

Brundage Not Worried.

"In the last analysis, I am not worried about finances," said Brundage, before returning tonight to Chicago. "We will be glad to have the opposition to the Olympics stay out in the open where the patriotic people of the country can judge for themselves whether they want to keep sport separated from politics as well as racial or religious issues. We do not uphold Nazi Germany. We do uphold the Olympics. I am convinced the mass of people will share my view that the games belong to the athletes. I believe they will support the Olympics on that basis, and that as a matter of fact anything lost by the tactics of obstructionists will be offset by the support of people wanting fair play in sport."

Brundage declined to go into financial details but it is understood the A. O. C. hopes to raise between $100,000 and $150,000 from the proceeds of various Olympic tryouts. Basketball, on the Olympic program for the first time, is expected to tap a big source of revenue by means of the country-wide tryouts leading up to the finals involving five college quintets, two from the A. A. U. and one from the Y. M. C. A.

Exchange Statements.

Brundage and his predecessor, Jeremiah T. Mahoney, of New York, who retired from the presidency of the A. A. U. after leading the nonparticipation fight, exchanged bristling statements at long range during a day marked by generally favorable reaction throughout the country to the A. A. U. decision.

In Chicago, Maj. John L. Griffith, president of the National Collegiate A. A., commissioner of the Big Ten Conference and a one-time foe of the A. A. U., said: "I heartily approve the action of the A. A. U. in voting down all efforts to bar participation of American athletes in the Olympics. I didn't see why we should be the only Nation to get excited about it when the other nations closer to Germany didn't show signs of excitement."

Other collegiate support came from L. W. St. John, athletic director at Ohio State, and Brutus Hamilton, University of California track coach and a former Olympic athlete. St. John emphasized Germany does not conduct the Olympics and is answerable to international athletic authorities on all Olympic matters. Hamilton said: "I certainly don't approve Nazi treatment of Jews, but I think it was probably the saner policy to agree to United States participation."

Bitterness Increasing.

Meanwhile, bitterness aroused during the two-day covnention fight within the A. A. U. was increasingly in evidence. Nonparticipationists prepared to continue the fight under the leadership of Mahoney, who denounced the methods by which all boycott moves were beaten off on a roll-call vote and hurled the word "liar" at Brundage.

Mahoney, stressing the fact that the active A. A. U. vote in the convention favored nonparticipation, but was offset by the ballots of so-called "allied bodies," delivered a fresh attack upon the pro-Olympic forces. Declaring "well-known Nazis" were listed among the representatives of these allied organizations entitled to vote, Mahoney said:

"The three votes cast by the German-American Athletic Union, by the American Turnerbund and by Harold Dibblee, a paid employe of Madison Square Garden, in behalf of the National Cycling Association, an organization apparently controlled by professionals, were more than sufficient to decide with the others that America should participate. It is this character of vote upon which Brundage and his followers relied to defeat the will of the A. A. U. and the sports-loving public of America."

Brundage lost no time taking sharp issue with Mahoney on this score. Upholding the interests and rights of the "allied bodies," who

Krueger Leads Golf Pros at Sarasota

Shoots 67 to Top Field in $2,000 Open on Florida Course.

By the Associated Press.

SARASOTA, Fla., Dec. 9.—A sensational 67, 4 under par, gave Alvin Krueger, of Beloit, Wis., the lead in the first round of the $1,000 Sarasota Open golf tournament today amid a low-scoring orgy.

Twenty-two of the 127 pros and amateurs shooting in the second event of the winter tour smashed conventional figures and 13 others finished with par 71.

Out in 34 and back in 33, Kreuger needed every birdie for a 1-stroke edge over Victor Ghezzi, of Deal, N. J.; Johnny Revolta, the Professional Golfers Association champion from Milwaukee, and Zell Eaton, of Oklahoma City, who turned pro last week in time to win $105 in the Orlando Open.

Hudlin Shoots 69.

Two amateurs smacked their way into the select circle carding 69s. They were Willis Hudlin, major league pitcher for the Cleveland Indians, and Morton McCarthy, of Norfolk, Va.

Professionals finishing 2 less than par over the Bobby Jones Club course were Wild Bill Mehlhorn, of Louisville, Ky.; Ed Dudley, of Augusta, Ga.; Craig Wood, of New York; Ray Raynor, of Woodbury, N. J.; Jack Toomer, of Asheville, N. C.; John Bulla, of Lockport, Ill.,

Quinn Denies Braves Deal, Says He's Trying

Chicago, Dec. 9 (U.P.).—Robert Quinn, former owner of the Boston Red Sox, tonight denied reports he had purchased the Boston Braves, but indicated he would "make a try for them" tomorrow when the annual major league winter meeting opens here.

"It's foolish to say that I have bought the Braves," Quinn said, "before the meeting has even started. I mean to make a try for them tomorrow but have not completed any deal yet."

Asked concerning a rumored purchase price of $350,000, Quinn said he had no definite price in mind.

Manush Chief Lure as Griffith Goes to Market for Pitchers

By Shirley Povich.

Sports Editor of The Post.

EN ROUTE to CHICAGO, Dec. 9. Armed with supposed trading secrets that are now no more secret than the time on the town clock, Washington ball club chieftains are sallying forth to the Chicago trading mart bent, firstly, on acquiring two pitchers and, secondly, on adding right-handed hitting strength.

Owner Clark Griffith, Manager Bucky Harris and Club Secretary Edward B. Eynon, jr., the triumvirate which will negotiate for the Nats any deals broached, will find themselves almost strictly on the defensive when the trading sessions open tomorrow morning.

It is no secret to every other club in the league that Washington is in desperate need of pitching talent and that the Nats are fair game for any club owner who does business with them.

Under such circumstances, the demands against the Washington club will be nigh. The Nats will be forced to bargain for acceptable pitchers with only a limited supply of trading material available. Griffith has placed none of his genuine stars on the trading block, with Outfielder Heinie Manush representing his outstanding lure.

Griffith will demand a star pitcher in exchange for Manush, and if Earl Whitehill is included in a trade by the Nats, he, too, will be exchanged only for another top-flight pitcher. The others whom Griffith is in a mood to trade—Outfielders Fred Schulte and Johnny Stone and Pitcher Irving Hadley—are calculated to bring no outstanding acquisitions to the Washington club unless they are accompanied by a bundle of cash, with which Griffith is not overly equipped.

Refusing to divulge the particular pitching objects of their attention, Griffith and Harris are known, nevertheless, to be seeking one of the young pitchers on the Yankee staff—either Johnny Broaca or Johnny Murphy—Joe Knott, of the Browns, and Les Tietje, of the White Sox.

Among the reasons he advances for the Nats' failures last season, with pitching obviously the paramount weakness, Griffith counts the fact that the Nats were top-heavy with left-handed hitters. The 1936 line-up, as it looms currently, with Cecil Travis in the outfield and Buddy Lewis at third base, will further accentuate the Nats' vulnerability against left-handed pitching.

All Rose Bowl Seats Gone! Too Early Sell-Out Is Costly

By the Associated Press.

PASADENA, Calif., Dec. 9.—Stanford tacked the "sold out" sign on the Rose Bowl gates today.

In one week of feverish buying, without a booth being opened the 84,600 seats for the New Year's football game between Stanford and Southern Methodist were purchased almost before the ink on the tickets was dry.

The unprecedented rush for pasteboards will cost the participating schools and the Tournament of Roses committee a pretty penny.

"We would have saved money on the ticket sales," said Don Liebendorfer, assistant graduate manager of Stanford, "if it had been spread out over a longer period and we had taken the bulk of the money in cash through the windows.

"It always is more expensive to sell tickets by application, and then too, we will have the expense of refunding the money sent us in applications that cannot be filled."

The net returns after the cost of presenting the game and the expenses of the opposing teams have been deducted are split in three equal parts—among the Rose Tournament committee, Stanford, and Southern Methodist.

The game between Stanford and Alabama last January 1, which drew the largest crowd in the 20 years of the intersectional classic, also was a sell out. The net profits amounted to approximately $234,000.

Amazing as was the ticket sale for that game, when offices were closed the day before Christmas, it in no way compared with the present situation. The avalanche of mail really started when Southern Methodist was named a week ago. That speaks well for the Mustang "aerial circus."

Foxx's Sale to Sox Completed, Report

By the Associated Press.

Philadelphia, Dec. 9.—Reports reaching Philadelphia today from Chicago major league meetings were that the sale of four of the Athletics' stars to the Boston Red Sox has been completed.

The talk was that First Baseman Jimmy Foxx, Outfielder Doc Cramer, Shortstop Eric McNair and either Pitcher Johnny Marcum, or perhaps Third Baseman Pinky Higgins, would go to the Sox.

In return the A's would get $250,000 to $350,000 and at least two players, one of whom would be Infielder Bill Werber. The other mentioned was Babe Dahlgren.

Although Mack went South recently ostensibly to arrange for spring exhibition dates, it was reliably reported he had been in consultation with Owner Tom Yawkey, of the Red Sox, on his trip.

Godwin K. O.'d By Delaney In Second

Bob Towry Stops Scipio in First Round of Semifinal Bout.

By Bill McCormick.

BOB GODWIN, the once worthy ringster who seemed headed up the tortuous fistic comeback trail, sung his swan song at Joe Turner's Arena last night as he was pounded into the resin dust and ring oblivion by a new local sensation—one Al Delaney, of Buffalo, N. Y.

Delaney, whose terrific punching power had established a clear lead for him in the first round, applied the coup de grace to the Herald Harbor fire chief, who had better confine his efforts to answering four-alarms from now on, after 45 seconds of the second round.

A crowd of 1,500, most of whom had entered the arena expecting to see Godwin repeat his surprising victory over Buck Everett last summer, gasped in astonishment as Delaney answered the opening bell with a crashing right hand, then another, which had poor Bobby out on his feet and gasping in astonishment.

Came the second round and Godwin danced out jabbing a rather futile left to Delaney's midsection. Delaney charged in with both fists flying, pinning Godwin on the ropes. The Buffalo youngster rammed home a terrific left hook to the jaw and Godwin's body sagged in his arms. Delaney wrestled him away, shot a few more punches and Godwin dropped, face down, in the resin dust.

The referee commenced his count. At the count of seven, Godwin still was inert. At eight, his body began to quiver. At nine he raised himself, still out, but battling valiantly against the knockout, to his knees. At ten, he dropped his head to the canvas and was writhing grotesquely as his handlers rescued him from the fighting pit.

The winner, who belongs to the famous "I fought Joe Louis Club," is credited by the Brown Bomber himself with giving Joe his toughest fight. Louis has publicly admitted that he had great difficulty solving Delaney's style; that Delaney hit him the hardest he ever has been hit, and knocked two teeth down his throat before he finally found the answer and stopped last night's winner.

At the time Delaney met Louis, he was known in the ring as Otto Borchuk, his real name. He was only 17 then, 3 years younger than the sensational Negro. He was only 18 years old when he stopped Godwin last night, although he told the Boxing Commission he was 20 when he signed his application.

Towry Stops Scipio.

Bob Towry, Washington welterweight, made an auspicious return to the ring after a year's layoff by stopping Mike Scipio, of Baltimore, in 1 minute and 30 seconds of a bout scheduled for six rounds. Towry sent Mike to the deck twice for nine counts, then once more he bounced Scipio to the canvas

Cardinals Hold Light Drills in Preparation for Classic.

By Lewis F. Atchison.

MIAMI'S Orange Bowl committee early last night ended its quest for a team to oppose Catholic University in a New Year's Day game when University of Mississippi officials telegraphed their acceptance of an invitation to represent the South in the annual classic.

News of Ole Miss' acceptance was received by Dutch Bergman in New York, where the Cardinals' coach will be guest of honor at a meeting of the Touchdown Club this afternoon. Until yesterday afternoon it was thought that Auburn still might be obtained for the fray, but the Plainsmen's guarantee demand proved to be too high for Bowl officials.

Mississippi this year enjoyed its best football season in history, defeating nine of eleven opponents, and losing only to Marquette and Tennessee. The team was the highest scoring machine in the Southeastern Conference and produced the Conference's high individual scorer in Halfback Ray Hapes.

Beat Mississippi State.

Its record shows victories over Millsaps, Memphis, Southwestern, Sewanee, Florida, St. Louis, Center, Centenary and Mississippi State. Tennessee nosed it out, 14 to 13, but Marquette won by the decisive figures of 33 to 7.

Bergman said that whatever team the committee selected for his team would be acceptable to him, and the better tthe team the better he would like it. The Brooklander's boss believes he has a grade A major league eleven and he is ready to prove it by winning a decisive victory in the intersectional fray.

Light Workouts.

Meanwhile, the team continued light workouts in preparation for the fray. Assistant Coach Fod Cotton had the squad out for more than an hour yesterday running through signals and trying two new plays that have been designed especially for the Orange Bowl.

Plans for Catholic University's invasion of Miami were discussed yesterday at a meeting between Bergman and G. E. Hussey, of the bowl committee, who were in conference an hour at the university athletic office. The Cards probably will leave for the South on December 27, returning about January 3, but complete details of the trip have not been arranged.

Ardawn Struggles Through Mud to Win Charles Town Purse

Jilted Outrun In Stretch Battle

Spring Weather Brings 3,500 to Track in Mountains.

By Walter Haight,
A Staff Correspondent.

CHARLES TOWN, W. Va., Dec. 9.—Ardawn, named for her sire and dam, Artesian and Daughter of Dawn, closed courageously here this afternoon to win the feature race, The Beverly Brown Purse, over the 7-furlong course. Running over a slicky, holding track that brought some of the worst time ever recorded on this oval, Ardawn came up in the last sixteenth of a mile to score a length decision over Jilted, which, in turn, had three-fourths of a length advantage over Sun Way.

Despite the wretched track conditions, the weather was the best of the meeting. It was spring time in the mountains and some few of the 3,500 customers carried their overcoats on their arms as the program began.

Double Worth $272.

From a monetary angle, the high point of the afternoon was the $272.40 daily double collected by a select few. Move Faster and Passing Sun was the important combination after $2,422 had been placed in the pool.

The feature race was a two-horse affair as far as the win money was concerned. Jilted went to the front at the break, followed by Ardawn, and the two battled it out all the way. In the stretch Jockey Jimmy Cowley jolted his mount with the whip and Ardawn responded with the drive that decided the issue.

Ardawn was only a lukewarm betting proposition and paid a $9.40 mutuel.

Keswick, 5 to 1.

Keswick won the sixth race to pay a $12.60 mutuel, catching Marge in the final sixteenth after the latter had opened a long lead on the back stretch. The final went to Count Adrian at an $8.60 mutuel.

Stack Arms, showing a liking for the heavy track, gradually wore down the front-running Fashion Queen to win the first race at an $8.60 mutuel. Roque Pine was third in the field of eight. Heart Tease, the favorite, was pinched back at the break and was not a factor. Fashion Queen opened a long lead on the back stretch, but tired gradually thereafter and Jockey Jimmy Sullivan brought Stack Arms along in time to take the decision.

Move Faster, the favorite, won the second race under the guidance of Jockey L. Pikor. The son of Whiskalong proved much the best and was being eased at the end of the route. Tetra Domino closed with good courage to take second money from Bromide, the tiring pace-setter. Move Faster paid $5.60.

Comes With Rush.

Passing Sun, a son of the mud-running Wrack, came from behind to take the third purse from Amasin and Falmouth Belle. Ridden by Eddie Johnson, Passing Sun improved his position along the back stretch and came with a rush when placed to a drive to win by a daylight margin. The winner paid $20.80.

High Dry found the slicky track to her liking in the fourth race and scored a nose decision over Bramble Run. Both went to the outside entering the stretch with the latter suffering the most. Rolling Along was a distant third. High Dry, capably ridden by Jockey Jimmy Cowley, paid $9.60. The favored Dolente was nowhere in particular.

Omaha Trim and Fit on Bowie Farm

The King of the 3-year-olds taking a nibble of oats from Joe Donelin, his trainer, at the Bel Air Stud of Owner William Woodward, near Bowie race track. Omaha will probably go to California, thence to England next summer for the Ascot Gold Cup.

Charles Town Race Track, Dec. 9.

Dear Al:

The present engagement of "The Battle of Charles Town" will end as scheduled on Saturday. Although track officials would like to extend the session a week or two, it is doubtful if the West Virginia racing commission will grant the additional dates. One thing is certain, the track is making money and likes the idea. However, it seems willing to share success with the horsemen. Today announcement was made that $400 will be added to the purses each day until the close of the meeting. Six of the daily events will draw $50 more and the other will have $100 added, making the race a handicap. Eddie Smith, the Washington jockey, who was injured just before Bowie closed, will resume his saddle career here tomorrow. The heavy track played havoc with the favorite players. Sammy Palumbo, the jockey sensation, escaped a shutout by riding the day's final winner. Clocker Mike is leaving for Tropical Park tomorrow and Trainer Joe and myself will be joining him Monday morning if the last gun is fired here Saturday at sundown. BILL.

First race—Povel should have won his last. The colt was forced to the outside fence entering the stretch and then came with a rush. Better racing luck is all that is needed here. Scout On and Banana to take care of the others.

Second race—Mayzniata won impressively here last week and should the track remain off it would enhance his chances. Palumbo is likely to ride. Small Change will like this route and is honest and dangerous. Sea Finn has been working well and may be dangerous.

Third race—Little Argo has an edge on this group. Has only to run back to one of his races on the mile track to win this by a city block. Whiskora didn't like that hard track last out but ran a bang-up second. Inflee will like soft going. Clocker Mike likes Topsie H.

Fourth race—Black Ribbon was nosed out in that last. I understand that Palumbo will ride tomorrow and I see no reason for mistakes. Philarita has worked well and may be a keen factor. Harmoak for the show.

Fifth race—Ada Wan will appreciate a soft track. She has the early speed necessary in this short race and I'm going to string along. Enthusiasm and Small Devil seem best suited of the others. If you are a Clocker Mike follower play Royal Veil.

Sixth race—Tolimata, a winner last week, seems capable of repeating in this company. Miss Catalan is the one to beat off her last effort. Swagger Stick did not like the hard track the other day and is dangerous.

Seventh race—Annimessic has a smattering of class and showed a good sprint effort last out. May do a lot of running in the last part of this distance event to take the purse. Bay Wrack closed excellently here Saturday. Politen for the show.

Best bet—Tolimata.

Colonials and Cards Top Rivals in Openers

Shenandoah Is Humbled, 50 to 16

Golfaden Leader With 16 Points; G. W. Leads at Half, 20-5.

By Dave Herman.

THE 1935-36 edition of George Washington University's basketball team went through its baptismal fire under the Reinhart system last night at the Tin Tabernacle, and impressively crushed Shenandoah College, 50-16.

With Ben Golfaden and Tommy O'Brien, forwards, and Hal Kiesel, center, pouring hot leather into the hoops, accounting for 42 points, the Colonials had little trouble disposing of the Dayton, Va., dribblers.

George Washington threw such a high-powered cordon around the tall Virginians that Shenandoah was limited to five scanty points for 28 minutes.

Penetrating the Shenandoah defense almost as it pleased, the Colonials pranced into a 20-5 lead at half time.

Scoring honors went to Golfaden, the whirling dervish, who tallied 16 points, four of which were the result of four successful free throws. Right behind came Kiesel, who whipped in seven field goals, one more than Golfaden, for 14 points. O'Brien, a sophomore, cracked the baskets for 12 markers.

These three, each a 6 footer, ran the opposition literally ragged with their bullet-like passes and deadly fire.

Once he cocked the scoring trigger, Kiesel seldom missed. When in doubt, he flipped the ball to Golfaden and O'Brien. And Golfaden and O'Brien also obliged Mr. Kiesel when the Virginians attempted to smear their passes.

Over on the defense the football ace of aces, Capt. Alphonse ("Tuffy") Leemans, and Milt Schoenfeld, played sterling games. Although guilty of a few wild heaves, Tuffy elicited cheers by his sturdy guarding. He was elected captain of the team just before the contest. Since only seniors were eligible, his election was a mere formality.

Murray and Morlock, both guards, were outstanding for Shenandoah.

George Washington leaves tomorrow for Columbus, Ohio, to meet Ohio State Thursday night, returning here Friday.

Bob Godwin Down and Out in Turner's Arena Feature

and the Baltimore lad was just a second too slow rising to beat the full count.

Stanford Carrier scored a record-quick knockout over Joe Sibley, of Baltimore, in a preliminary scheduled for four rounds. Carrier floored Sibley for a five count with a right to the jaw 5 seconds after the bout started. Sibley rose to run into a left to the stomach, which sent him down for good. The knockout was scored in 10 seconds—a record for the new arena, possibly for Washington.

Livingston Disqualified.

Pike Muskogee, Baltimore middleweight won on a disqualification from Tony Livingston, of Quantico, in the second round of a rousing opener scheduled for four rounds. Making his professional debut, the Marine, who was brought back from service in China to represent the corps in the Olympics, but changed his mind, was doing all right until he lost his head and refused to cease firing when ordered.

Muskogee was floored for nine in the first, in which he took a nice battering, but in the second, he bounced back, slapping Livingston to the canvas for nine. Livingston rose in mighty fury, smacking his opponent from pillar to post. Referee Constantine Placos sought to pull him off, but Livingston heeded not, and was immediately disqualified.

They're Saying So:

By Lewis F. Atchison.

Dr. Jake Goldblatt, who used to be plain Jakie Goldblatt when he starred on the court for Tech High School, is coaching the Jewish Community Center basket ball team . . . and wants to be reinstated by the A. A. U. but is experiencing difficulties . . . Jim Carney, a member of Catholic Universitys famed reindeers of 1928, owns an interest in the Miami Kennel Club . . . going to the dogs in style, so to speak . . . Clint Price, the 150-pound kid who used to hit the 200-pounders harder than the rest when performing for old St. Mary's Celtics against the Mohawks, operates a riding club . . . a meeting of college football coaches, called to select an All-District team for one of the dailies, almost broke up in a riot when Jim Pixlee, of George Washington, and Dutch Bergman, of Catholic University, exchanged uncomplimentary remarks . . . top salary for one of the local semi-pro teams hereabouts was five dollars per game . . . the seven reporters who resigned from George Washington's school paper did so because of discrimination against a Jewish lad who was rightfully supposed to head the annual Christmas food drive . . . Southern Conference officials are ready to forgive and forget their grievances with the prodigal members who broke away and organized the Southeastern Conference . . . because the prestige of the Southern's football teams has slumped horribly . . . the Washington Pros had only one play this season . . . when they wanted to move in another direction the quarterback merely told the ball carrier to follow a certain player.

Best story of the week concerns an assistant football coach at a local school who was picking up extra money playing with a team best identified as Patterson. . . . Patterson scheduled the "Cincinnati Reds," and the coach was bragging to the boys under his direction about the importance of the game . . . only to discover that the "Reds" were a group of District players appropriating the Reds' name . . . and most of them were from his own squad. . . .

Second best story involves an elderly and gruff telegraph operator whose hat was blown off by a gust of wind as he stood at Eleventh and E streets . . . as he went to retrieve it another gust blew it on the running board of a passing auto. . . . A copy boy heard of the event and that night in the presence of the telegrapher, recounted how a "fussy old geezer's" hat had been blown up on the running board of his machine while passing Eleventh and E. . . . While the old dot and dash operator fumed and sputtered, the boy recounted how he took it and sold it to a second-hand clothing dealer . . . for a dime.

Sanico League Featured by Big Scores

HIGH scores galore featured the continuation of competition in the hotly contested Sanico League last night at the Convention Hall runways with the leading Jumbo Bread team strengthening its hold on the top position with three victories over Sanico Oats. Tom Bradford, spark plug of the pace setters, came through with a 155 game for high game of the night.

Bill Gartrell, of the Sanico Hams, aided by a 152 game, spilled the maples for a 152 game and a season record of 412 and Billie La Bille, high individual average bowler of the league boosted his average with a 152 game and 402 set. The Office team retained second place though dropping the odd game to Sanico Meats.

Chalking up four strikes in a row and a couple of spares besides, E. W. Samuels, of the Aztecs team, rolled a 176 game to establish a new season record in the Procurement League last night at the Recreation drives. His total for the set was 404. The Orientals continued to top the league by two games in gaining an odd game decision over the Saxons.

Astor Clarke, of the first-place Investigation team in the Federal League, clouted the maples for a 164 game and a 407 set to gain high individual honors last night at Arcadia. Team game and set laurels were annexed by G. P. O. with 628 and 1,781, respectively.

A new record for the Whats in a Name League was rolled last night at Lucky Strike when Ida Weinberg turned in a brilliant 153 game. Washington Centennial took undisputed possession of first place in the Eastern Star League, whitewashing the Jos. Milans. Mizpah broke the existing team game and set records for the season with 564 and 1,577, respectively.

Columbia Firemen Win Thriller From Aviators

A whistling pot-shot by Lesley Williams, with less than two minutes to play, gave the Columbia Fire Department a 35-32 victory over Bolling Field in the Heurich Amateur Basketball League last night in the Brewery gym.

The last half was replete with thrills. The score was tied four times in the final five minutes. Each time, however, it was the Alexandria Firemen who broke the deadlock.

Tomorrow night's Heurich League schedule:

8:30 o'clock—Fire Department vs. Delaware & Hudson; Bovello Plumbers vs. Olmsted; Heurich Flashes vs. Fort Myer.

Lie Is Passed In Olympic Dispute

were 15-to-1 behind him on the final vote, Brundage charged that regular A. A. U. delegations were "packed with outsiders" who never before had attended a convention and who were there because of a "well-organized, well-financed campaign of propaganda all over the country."

"The vote of the allied bodies, in fact, was significant of the widespread support of our participation in the Olympics," said Brundage. "Moreover, the A. A. U. vote was misleading. For example, an association with only one delegate could and did cast three votes against participation, whereas the Metropolitan Association, standing 10 to 2 in support of the Olympics, had to split its three convention votes accordingly."

So far as the A. A. U. was concerned, Brundage charged bluntly, it was an "issue between principles and dollars." He conceded the sincerity of many nonparticipationists, but insisted "thousands of dollars" were spent to finance the boycott drive, whether or not there was any truth to the reports he said he had heard about a $1,000,000 "war chest."

"Hearsay," Says Mahoney.

To this Mahoney replied: "I heard about the fund, too, but Brundage is quoting nothing but hearsay. I think if there were a million dollars around he is just the type of fellow who would be right after it. If he thinks I influenced delegates or says I distributed paid propaganda, he is a liar. What the Jews of America did is one thing. I know nothing about it."

Manush Is Lure In Baseball Mart

Unless right-handed hitting replacements are obtained, Harris will be saddled with six left-handed hitters in regular positions, excluding the pitcher. The only spots in the line-up where right-handed hitting could be brought to bear would be at shortstop, where Red Kress may hold forth, and in center field, patroled by Jake Powell. Every other infield and outfield position, including the catcher, would be represented by a southpaw hitter.

So, Griffith will not sniff disdainfully at any deal that would bring Gerald Walker from Detroit to the Washington outfield, or Zeke Bonura from first base in Chicago to first base in Washington, or Eric McNair from shortstop in Philadelphia.

Wilson and Furr Sign to Battle Here Monday

Bob Wilson, transplanted Florida knockerout, and Phil Furr, District welterweight champion, have been signed to a 15-round title bout to be held at Joe Turner's Arena next Monday night.

Furr easily defeated Wilson in a previous encounter held at the Riding and Hunt Club, but since then Bob has been on a tour of Australia and has campaigned successfully in Baltimore.

Furr last week successfully defended his laurels by knocking out Sid Silas in the 13th round.

Roosevelt High to Play Mt. St. Joseph's Today

With two victories already chalked up in the young basketball season, Roosevelt High steps out for its third straight triumph this afternoon with Mount St. Joseph's High, of Baltimore, as the would-be victim. The Rough Riders are favored to keep their winning streak unbroken despite the high caliber of the opposition. Roosevelt beat the Marylanders last season.

Women Managers Note.

All coaches and managers of women's basketball teams are requested to be present at a meeting tonight at 8 o'clock at the Langley Junior High School with a view to forming a Community Center basketball league.

Congress Heights Travels.

The Congress Heights basketball outfit travels to Charlotte Hall, Md., tomorrow night to meet the military academy there at 8 p. m. Starting lineup for the local team will be Scrout and Xander, forwards; Timmons, center, and Henderson and Taylor, guards.

Normal Five Is Subdued, 37 to 24

C.U. Team Sluggish, But Outplays Foe All Way; Schmarr Is Star.

WITH the stubborn certainty of a huge tank rumbling over rough terrain, a band of Catholic University gridmen, disguised as a basketball team, ploughed through Maryland State Normal to a 37-to-24 victory last night in their opening game of the season.

A throng of 1,500 fans saw the husky Brookland wrecking crew remove the little Normal quintet from their path in a rough but firm manner. The only basketball player on the court for Catholic was Capt. Bernie Lieb and he was almost lost in the rush as the grizzly gridmen stampeded toward Maryland's goal.

Hermie Schmarr's pass receiving at left forward was one of the evening's highlights, and, aided by Lieb's pretty passing, managed to garner high-scoring honors with 11 points. "Irish" Carroll, whose sweeping end runs and broken-field sprints were no less than spectacular, Zeke Brown and Lieb also played leading roles in the point-getting.

Teachers Rally.

Catholic boasted a 24-to-8 lead at the half-time, with Maryland held to a lone field goal during that period. Lieb, feeding his mates under the bucket, found Normal's zone defense easy to penetrate and it was all in the home team's favor. But Maryland rallied in the final period, and only "Yan" Yanchulis' brilliant tackling saved the Cards from being overtaken.

The new 3-seconds rule, and that of giving the ball outside to a team scored on via the foul route, worked exceedingly well and speeded up play immeasurably. That proved to be highly acceptable to both players and fans.

In a preliminary game the Catholic freshmen defeated Silver Spring High, 34 to 21.

On The Air Today

RUDY VALLEE and Helen Hayes will be in town this week and next for appearances at the National Theater—but Washington radio enthusiasts will not see either of them before a microphone.

Miss Hayes will do her weekly turn for N. B. C. audiences Monday and Tuesday nights from the studios in the National Press Building. But Vallee will leave the "Scandals" the Thursday night of its engagement here to return to New York for his hour network show.

Even though Miss Hayes will perform in Washington for her air audience, her rule of no guests for her studio performances will be upheld. She has already announced that Tuesday nights will be reserved for radio after her stage play "Victoria Regina" opens in New York. Consistent with this policy there will be no performance of "Victoria" the Tuesday night of the pre-New York week here.

This is the big day at WOL—the celebration of that station's eleventh birthday anniversary. The climax is reached at 9:30 p. m., when top-notch air talent from Washington's four stations get together for half an hour. The participants—Arthur Godfrey, Bill Coyle, Arch McDonald, Gordon Hittenmark, Art Brown and Ted Ostenkamp, with Arthur Reilly as master of affairs. What a magnificant half-hour of entertainment would result if Eugene O'Neill could only stage the appearance of these ace personalities of the local airways—with each man's thoughts expressed a la "Strange Interlude," in addition to the conventional wordage intended for the audience within—as well as without—the studio.

Should have mentioned before this: Mrs. Dorothy Tanty again won The Post spelling bee last Thursday night. She is captain of the Department of Agriculture team. When the half-hour allowed for the bee was up, Mrs. Tanty and three or four of her opponents remained to be spelled down to a finalist. After the program was off the air, the spelling went on until Mrs. Tanty finally emerged winner. It was her second victory. Her team disposed of the Government Printing Office team a few weeks ago.

Rakhmaninov Will Give Piano Recital Tonight

Sergei Rakhmaninov, the eminent Russian composer and pianist, will give a recital tonight at 8:30 o'clock in Constitution Hall, under the management of Mrs. Dorothy Hodgkin Dorsey. His program will be the same as the one he recently played for enthusiastic audiences in New York and Boston. The recital will begin with Beethoven's 32 variations in C minor, which will be followed by three snort sonatas by Domenico Scarlatti. The first part of the program will close with the impressive B minor sonata of Chopin.

After the intermission, Rakhmaninov will play two Skryabin compositions, "Poeme" and "Etude;" one of Medtner's "Fairy Tales," a scherzo by Borodin, a barcarolle by Rubinstein, an etude and a prelude of his own, and Erno von Dohnanyi's "Etude Caprice."

Cotton Report Cuts Crop, But Prices Decline

Government Estimates the Yield at 10,734,000 Bales This Year.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Dec. 9.—The Government crop estimate of 10,734,000 bales was below expectations but failed to stimulate cotton prices today and prices broke sharply near the close when disappointed holders sold. March yielded 20 points and closed at 11.41, with the general market barely steady at net declines of 13 to 20 points.

Most of the decline in production estimates during the past 30 days occurred in Texas and Oklahoma, where weather conditions were reported unfavorable for the maturing and picking of the late crop.

The harvested acreage, now estimated at 27,331,000 acres, is about 1.3 per cent greater than the total harvested in 1934.

The average yield per acre this year was reported to be 188 pounds, compared with 170.9 pounds in 1934 and a 10-year average, 1924-1933, of 177.1 pounds.

Market Prices Dip Slightly In Conflicting News Trend

Homestake Mining Supplies the Fireworks With a Jump of 30 Points; Government Bonds Are Steady.

By Frank MacMillen,
Associated Press Financial Writer.

New York, Dec. 9.—Soaring specialty issues, several of them at new highs for the year or longer, provided occasional fireworks for an irregular stock market today. Financial analysts said the swift cross currents of conflicting trade and foreign news had left investors and traders in a confused state of mind.

While the market as a whole was under the influence of no single dominant force, a handful of special developments served to haul individual groups in their wake.

The lowering of the price of imported bar silver at New York from 65⅜ to 64¾ cents an ounce, the first reduction since August 26, brought selling into the white metal shares.

The market got away to a fast start with prices firm on trading so heavy that the ticker was left behind. In spite of the fact the specialties ran ahead of the pack, the rest of the list bumped into profit-taking, more aggressive in some sectors than in others.

Small Average Decline.

After jiggling around irregularly during the balance of the session, the market, as measured by the Associated Press average of 60 stocks, closed down .2 of a point at 55.5. Transactions totaled 2,542,330 shares against 2,424,710 on Friday.

Homestake Mining on small volume jumped 30 points to close at 480. Brokers pointed out the small floating supply of the shares makes them susceptible to wide price swings.

Motor Products bounded ahead 6¾ to 67½ coincident with the declaration of a stock dividend of 100 per cent and two payments of 50 cents on the increased capital shares. Coca-cola, another split issue, rose 6¼ to 89¼.

Shares off fractions to 2 or more points included U. S. Steel at 48⅛, Westinghouse at 92⅛, American Smelting at 62¾, U. S. Smelting at 107¼ and Cerro de Pasco at 62⅜. Those which went up as much included: Chrysler at 84⅝, Anaconda at 30, Electric Auto-lite at 35¼, American Chain at 31¼ and Briggs at 53⅛.

Trade News Favorable.

Trade and industrial news imparted a gloss of confidence to the financial community. The estimate of the American Iron & Steel Institute that production this week would run at 55.7 per cent of capacity against 56.4 last week accorded with Wall Street's expectations for the year-end slackening.

General Motors reported sales to consumers in November at 136,859 units compared with 68,566 in October and 62,752 in November, 1934. The stock was up 1¼ to 56¼.

Sears Roebuck turned in a gain of 23 per cent over the 1934 period for the four weeks ended December 3. Meanwhile, 17 reporting chain stores, exclusive of mail order houses, reported an advance of 13.5 per cent for November over the same month last year.

Demand for the amusement stocks was ascribed in most quarters to the outlook for heavy holiday attendance. Columbia voting trust certificates rose 3⅝ to 72⅝. Paramount at 10⅛ and Radio-Keith-Orpheum at 5⅜ were fractional gainers.

Bonds were steady with some improvement in United States Government obligations.

Wheat finished ⅝ to 1 cent a bushel down and corn was ¼ to ½ a cent lower. Cotton ended 65 cents to $1 a bale lower. In the foreign exchange market the pound sterling was steady. The gold bloc currencies were under pressure.

Sears-Roebuck Sales Increase 23.8 Per Cent

Chicago, Dec. 9 (AP).—A 23 per cent increase in sales was announced by Sears, Roebuck & Co. today for its eleventh business period, covering November 6 to December 3. Total sales volume was given at $37,988,700, compared with $30,878,320 in the comparable period of 1934, a gain of $7,110,380.

For the first 11 periods of the business year, the cumulative sales total was $343,379,996, up $65,950,494 from 1934's volume of $277,429,502. The even-period improvement was announced as 23.8 per cent.

Silver at 64¾; First Decline In Four Months

Drop of ⅝ of a Cent Is Attributed to Far-Eastern Selling.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Dec. 9.—The world price of bar silver dropped ⅝ of a cent to 64¾ cents an ounce in New York today, the first change in the price since August.

The drop followed a sag in the London market, and reduced the price for foreign metal for commercial use in New York to the lowest level since April 10, last, when it was on its way up to the peak of recent years of 81 cents, reached in last April's flurry of speculation.

The 64¾-cent level, however, does not affect domestic mines, which may still sell their metal to the United States Treasury at 77.57 cents an ounce, the buying rate which has been in effect since last spring.

The London price sagged seven-sixteenths of a penny to 28¾ pence, equivalent to 63.86 cents an ounce at New York, at the current rate of exchange.

Silver dealers in New York attributed the sag in price to Far-Eastern selling, possibly due to the efforts of the Chinese Nationalist government to nationalize the metal and place China on a managed currency allied to sterling.

Thye said that the United States Treasury evidently was unwilling to take all the foreign metal offered, to support the price.

Treasury Is Silent.

The Treasury declined comment yesterday on the break in world silver prices. In the absence of Secretary Morgenthau, other officials would advance no explanation of the drop to 64¾ cents an ounce, ⅝ of a cent decline.

Morgenthau repeatedly has said the Treasury was pursuing the silver purchase policy in good faith. The law directs buying until a price of $1.29 an ounce is reached or silver stocks reach one-third the huge gold supply.

Holiday Dress For Clarendon Streets Ready

BUREAU OF THE POST.
Tel. Clar. 509. Clarendon, Va.

With the Christmas holidays but two weeks off, George M. Yeatman, president of the Clarendon Business Men's Association, last night announced plans have been completed under the direction of H. W. Beattie, chairman of the committee, to convert the business section of the community into "A Santa Claus Lane."

The plans provide for setting huge Christmas trees in boxes along Wilson boulevard from North Highland street to North Irving street. Each of the trees will be trimmed with colored lights.

Reports received from Mrs. Norbert Melnick, county chairman in charge of sale of Christmas seals, shows $796 has thus far been received, compared with $500 for the same period last year.

An appeal is made to all citizens to do their part, as all the money goes to maintain check clinics for X-ray treatment of children, nursing service and educational work.

Mrs. R. N. Davies, public health nurse, said it should be looked upon as a great privilege to purchase and use the tuberculosis seals.

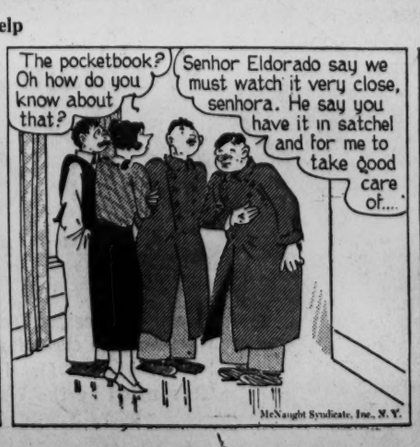
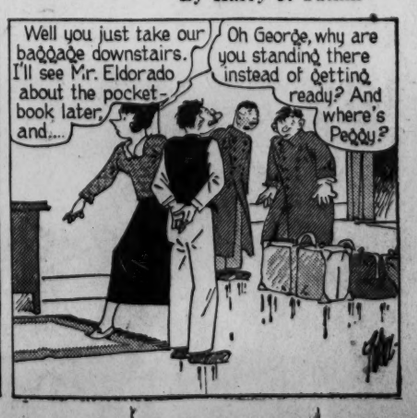
The idea! Imagine Mr. Eldorado's car getting here so early. He told me positively it wouldn't be here until 10 o'clock. Peggy, where are you?
There's the driver at the door. I'll let him in.

Oh you're so early. I'm sorry, but we're not half ready. You'll just have to wait.
Yes, senhora. While we wait we take the satchels down. Ah, which one have the pocket-book in, please?
Reg. U.S. Pat. Off. 12-10



The pocketbook? Oh how do you know about that?
Senhor Eldorado say we must watch it very close, senhora. He say you have it in satchel and for me to take good care of....
McNaught Syndicate, Inc., N. Y.



Well you just take our baggage downstairs. I'll see Mr. Eldorado about the pocket-book later, and...
Oh George, why are you standing there instead of getting ready? And where's Peggy?
